Bi'LIARY. adj. [from bilis, Lat.] Belonging to the bile.

Voracious animals, and such as do not chew, have a great quantity of gall; and some of them have the biliary duct inserted into the pylorus. Arbuthnot.

Bi'LINGSATE. n. f. [A cant word, borrowed from Bilinggate in London, a place where there is always a crowd of low people, and frequent brawls and foul language.] Ribaldry; foul language.

There dript, fair rhetoric languish'd on the ground,
And shameful Bilinggate her robes adorn. Pope.

Bi'LINGVOUS. adj. [bilinguis, Lat.] Having, or speaking, two tongues.

Bi'LIUS. adj. [from bilis, Lat.] Consisting of bile; partaking of bile.

Why bilius juice a golden light puts on,
And floods of chyle in silver currents run. Garth.
When the taste of the mouth is bitter, it is a sign of a redundancy of a bilius alkali. Arbuth.

To BILK. v. a. [derived by Mr. Lye from the Gothick bilacan.] To cheat; to defraud, by running in debt and avoiding payment.

Bilk'd stationers for yeomen stood prepar'd. Dryden.

What comedy, what farce can more delight,
Than grinning hunger, and the pleasing fight
Of your bilk'd hopes? Dryden.

BILL. n. f. [bile, Sax. See BALL.] The beak of a fowl.

Their bills were thwarted crossways at the end, and with these they would cut an apple in two at one snap. Carew.

It may be tri'd, whether birds may not be made to have greater or longer bills, or greater or longer talons. Bacon.

In his bill
An olive leaf he brings, pacifick sign! Milton.
No crowing cock does there his wings display,
Nor with his horny bill provoke the day. Dryden.

BILL. n. f. [bille, Sax. epibille, a two edged axe.]

1. A kind of hatchet with a hooked point; used in country work, as a bedging bill;

so called from its resemblance in form to the beak of a bird of prey.

Standing troops are servants armed, who use the lance and sword, as other servants do the sickle or the bill, at the command of those who entertain them. Temple.

2. A kind of weapon anciently carried by the foot; a battle-axe.

Yea distaff women manage rusty bills;
Against thy feat both young and old rebel. Shaksp.

BILL. n. f. [billet, Fr.]

1. A written paper of any kind.

He does receive Particular addition from the bill
That writes them all alike. Shaksp.

2. An account of money.

Ordinary expence ought to be limited by a man's estate, and ordered to the best, that the bills may be less than the estimation abroad. Bacon.

3. A law presented to the parliament, not yet made an act.

No new laws can be made, nor old laws abrogated or altered, but by parliament; where bills are prepared, and presented to the two houses. Bacon.

How now for mitigation of this bill,
Urg'd by the commons? doth his majesty
Incline to it or no? Shaksp.

4. An act of parliament.

There will be no way left for me to tell you that I remember you, and that I love you, but that one, which needs no open warrant, or secret conveyance; which no bill can preclude, nor no kings prevent. Atterbury.

5. A physician's prescription.

Like him that took the doctor's bill,
And swallow'd it instead o' th' pill. Hudibras.
The medicine was prepared according to the bill. L'Estrange.

Let them, but under your superiours, kill,
When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill. Dryden.

6. An advertisement.

And in despair, their empty pit to fill,
Set up some foreign monster in a bill. Dryden.

7. In law.

1. An obligation, but without condition, or forfeiture for non-payment. 2. A declaration in writing, that expresseth either the grief and the wrong that the complainant hath suffered by the party complained of; or else some fault that the party complained of hath committed against some law. This bill is sometimes offered to justices errants in the general assizes; but most to the lord chancellor. It containeth the fact complained of, the damages thereby suffered, and petition of process against the defendant for redress. Cowell.

The fourth thing very maturely to be consulted by the jury, is, what influence their finding the bill may have upon the kingdom. Swift.

8. A bill of mortality. An account of the numbers that have died in any district.

Most who took in the weekly bills of mortality, made little other use of them, than to look at the foot, how the burials encreased or decreased. Graunt.

So liv'd our fires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,
And multiply'd with theirs the weekly bill. Dryd.

9. A bill of fare. An account of the season of provisions, or of the dishes at a feast.

It may seem somewhat difficult to make out the bills of fare for some of the forementioned suppers. Arbuthnot.

10. A bill of exchange. A note ordering the payment of a sum of money in one place, to some person assigned by the drawer or remitter, in consideration of the value paid to him in another place.

The comfortable sentences are bills of exchange, upon the credit of which we lay our cares down, and receive provisions. Taylor.

All that a bill of exchange can do, is to direct to whom money is due, or taken up upon credit, in a foreign country, shall be paid. Locke.

To BILL. v. n. [from bill, a beak.] To caw, as doves by joining bills; to be fond.

Doves, they say, will bill, after their pecking, and their innuming. Ben Jonson.

Still amorous, and fond, and billing,
Like Philip and Mary on a shilling. Hudibras.

They bill, they tread; Aye, one compress'd
Seven days fits blooding on her floating nest. Dryden.

He that hears th' artillery of Jove,
The strong pound'd eagle, and the billing dove. Dryden.

To BILL. v. a. [from bill, a writing.] To publish by an advertisement: a cant word.

His masterpiece was a composition that he billet about under the name of a sovereign antidote. L'Estrange.

BiLLET. n. f. [billet, French.]

When he found this little billet, in which was only written Remember Caesar, he was exceedingly confounded. Clarendon.

2. A ticket directing soldiers at what house to lodge.

3. Billet-doux, or a soft billet; a love letter.
'Twas then, Belinda! if report say true,
Thy eyes first open'd on a billet-doux. Pope.

4. [bilot, Fr.] A small log of wood for the chimney.

Let us then calculate, when the bulk of a sagot or billet is dilated and rarified to the degree of fire, how vast a place it must take up. Digby on Bodies.

Their billet at the fire was found. Prior.

To BiLLET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To direct a soldier by a ticket, or note, where he is to lodge.

Retire thee; go where thou art billeted: Away, I say. Shakespeare.

2. To quarter soldiers.

They remembered him of charging the kingdom, by billeting soldiers. Raleigh.

The counties throughout the kingdom were so incensed, and their affections poisoned, that they refused to suffer the soldiers to be billeted upon them. Clarendon.

BiLLIARDS. n. f. without a singular. [billard, Fr. of which that language has no etymology; and therefore they probably derived from England both the play and the name, which is corrupted from bal-yards, yards or sticks with which a ball is driven along a table. Thus Spenser:

Bal-yards much unfit,
And shuttlecocks misseeming manly wit. Hubbard's Tale]

A game at which a ball is forced against another on a table.

Let it alone; let's to billiards. Shakespeare.

Even nose and cheek withal,
Smooth as is the billiard ball. Ben Jonson

Some are forced to bound or fly upwards, almost like ivory balls meeting on a billiard table. Boyle.

When the ball obeys the stroke of a billiard stick, it is not any action of the ball, but bare passion. Locke.

BILLOW. n. f. [bilge, Germ. bolg, Dan. probably of the same original with bilg, Sax. a bladder.] A wave swollen, and hollow.

From whence the river Dee, as silver clear,
His tumbling billows rolls with gentle roar. Spenser.

Billows sink by degrees, even when the wind is down that first stirred them. Morton.

Chasing Nereus with his trident throws
The billows from the bottom. Denham.

To BiLLOW. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell, or roll, as a wave.

The billowing snow, and violence of the snow,
That from the hills disperse their dreadful store,
And o'er the vales collected ruin pour. Prior.

BiLLOW. v. a. [from billow.] Swelling; turgid; wavy.

And whitening down the mossy-tinctur'd stream,
Descends the billowy foam. Thomson.

Bin. n. f. [binne, Sax.] A place where bread, or corn, or wine, is repositied.

The most convenient way of picking hops, is into a long square frame of wood, called a bin. Mortimer.

As when, from rooting in a bin,
A powder'd o'er from tail to chin,
A lively maggot fallies out,
You know him by his hazel snout. Swift.

BiNARY. adj. [from binus, Lat.] Two; dual; double.

BiNARY Arithmetick. A method of computation proposed by Mr. Leibnitz, in which, in lieu of the ten figures in the common arithmetick, and the progression from ten to ten, he has only two figures, and uses the simple progression from two to two. This method appears to be the same with that used by the Chinese four thousand years ago. Chambers.

To BIND. v. a. pret. bound; part. pass. bound, or bounden. [bindan, Sax.]

1. To confine with bonds; to enchain.

Wilt thou play with him as with a bird? or wilt thou bind him for thy maidens? Job.

Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles, to burn them. Matthew.

5. To cover a wound with dressings and bandages: with up.

When he saw him, he had compassion on him, and went to him, and bound up his wounds. Luke.
Having filed up the bare cranium with our dressings, we bound up the wound. Wise man.

6. To oblige by stipulation, or oath.

If a man vow a vow, or swear an oath, to bind his soul with a bond, he shall not break his word. Numbers.

Swear by the solemn oath that binds the gods. Pope.

7. To oblige by duty or law; to compel; to constrain.

Though I am bound to every act of duty,
I am not bound to that all slaves are free to. Shakespeare.

Duties expressly required in the plain language of Scripture, ought to bind our consciences more than those that are but dutiously inferred. Watts.

8. To oblige by kindness.

9. To confine; to hinder: with in, if the restraint be local; with ap, if it relate to thought or act.

Now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in
To faucy doubts and fears. Shakespeare.

You will sooner, by imagination, bind a bird from singing, than from eating or flying. Bacon.

Though passion be the most obvious and general, yet it is not the only cause that binds up the understanding, and confines it, for the time, to one object, from which it will not be taken off. Locke.

In such a dismal place,
Where joy ne'er enters, which the sun ne'er cheers,
Bound in with darkness, overspread with damps. Dryden.

10. To hinder the flux of the bowels; to make costive.

Rhubarb hath manifestly in it parts of contrary operations; parts that purge, and parts that bind the body. Bacon.

The whey of milk doth loose, the milk doth bind. Herbert.

11. To restrain.

The more we are bound up to an exact narration, we want more life, and fire, to animate and inform the story. Felton.

12. To bind a book. To put it in a cover.

Was ever book, containing such vile matter,
So fairly bound? Shakespeare.

Those who could never read the grammar
When my dear volumes touch the hammer,
May think books best, as richest bound. Prior.

13. To bind to. To oblige to serve some one.

If still thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryd.

BIRTH. n. f. [beorð, Sax.]

1. The act of coming into life.

But thou art fair, and at thy birth, dear boy,
Nature and fortune join'd to make thee great. Shakespeare's King John.

In Spain, our springs like old men's children be,
Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy;
No kindly showers fall on our barren earth,
To hatch the seasons in a timely birth. Dryden.

2. Extraction; lineage.

Molt virtuous virgin, born of heavenly birth. Spenser.

All truth I shall relate; nor first can I Myself to his of Grecian birth deny. Denham.

3. Rank which is inherited by descent.

He doth object, I am too great of birth. Shak.
Be just in all you say, and all you do;
Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden.

4. The condition or circumstances in which any man is born.

High in his chariot then Halesus came,
A foe by birth to Troy's unhappy name. Dryden.

5. Thing born; production: used of vegetables, as well as animals.

The people fear me; for they do observe Unfather'd heirs, and loathly births of nature. Shakespeare.

That poets are far rather births than kings,
Your noblest father prov'd. Bea Jonson.

Who of themselves
Abhor to join; and, by imprudence mix'd, Produce prodigious births of body or mind. Milt.

She, for this many thousand years,
Seems to have practis'd with much care
To frame the race of woman fair;
Yet never could a perfect birth
Produce before, to grace the earth. Waller.

His eldest birth
Flies, mark'd by heav'n, a fugitive o'er earth. Prior.

The vallies smile, and with their flow'ry face,
And wealthy births, confess the flood's embrace. Blackmore.

Others hatch their eggs, and tend the births, till it is able to shift for itself. Addison.

6. The act of bringing forth.

That fair Syrian shepherdess
Who, after years of barrenness,
The highly favour'd Joseph bore
To him that serv'd for her before;
And at her next birth, much like thee,
Through pangs fled to sollicit. Milton.

7. The scamen call a due or proper distance between ships lying at an anchor, or under sail, a birth. Also the proper place on board for the masts to put their chests, &c. is called the birth of that masts. Also a convenient place to moor a ship in, is called a birth. Harris.

BIRTHDAY. n. f. [from birth and day.]

1. The day on which any one is born.

Orient light,
Exhaling first from darkness, they beheld Birthday of heaven and earth. Milton.

2. The day of the year in which any one was born, annually observed.

This is my birthday; as this very day
Was Cassius born. Shakspeare.
They tell me 'tis my birthday, and I'll keep it
With double pomp of ludnefs:
'Tis what the day deserves, which gave me breath. Dryden.

Your country dames,
Whose cloaths returning birthday claims. Prior.

BIRTHDOM. n. f. [This is erroneously, I think, printed in Shakspeare, birthdom. It is derived from birth and dom (see Dom) as kingdom, dukedom.] Privilege of birth.

Let us rather
Hold fast the mortal towrd; and, like good men, Betwixt our down-fall birthdom. Shakspeare.

BIRTHNIGHT. n. f. [from birth and night.]

1. The night on which any one is born.
Th' angelick song in Bethlehem field,
On thy birthnight, that sung the Saviour born.
Paradise Regained.

2. The night annually kept in memory of any one's birth.

A youth more glitt'ring than a birthnight beau.
Pope.

BIRTHPLACE. n. f. [from birth and place.]

Place where any one is born.
My birthplace hate I, and my love's upon
This enemy's town. Shakspeare.
A degree of stupidity beyond even what we have been charged with, upon the score of our birthplace and climate. Swift.

BIRTHRIGHT. n. f. [from birth and right.] The rights and privileges to which a man is born; the right of the first-born.

Thy blood and virtue Contend for empire in thee, and thy goodness Shares with thy birthright. Shakspeare.
Thou hast been found
By merit, more than birthright, Son of God.
Milton.

I lov'd her first, I cannot quit the claim,
But will preserve the birthright of my passion.
Orway.

While no baseness in this breast I find,
I have not lost the birthright of my mind. Dryden.
To say that liberty and property are the birthright of the English nation, but that, if a prince invades them by illegal methods, we must upon no pretence resist, is to confound governments.
Addison.

BIRTHSTRANGLER. adj. [from birth and strangle.] Strangled or suffocated in being born.

Finger of birthstrangled babe,
Dutch-deliver'd by a drab. Shakspeare.

BIRTHWORT. n. f. [from birth and wort; I suppose from a quality of hastening delivery: aristolochia, Lat.] A plant.

BISCOTIN. n. f. [French.] A confection made of flower, sugar, marmalade, eggs, &c.

BISCUIT. n. f. [from bis, twice, Lat. and cuit, baked, Fr.]

1. A kind of hard dry bread, made to be carried to sea: it is baked for long voyages four times.

The biscuit also in the ships, especially in the Spanish gallees, was grown hoarse and unwhole some. Kneller's History.

Many have been cured of dropsies by abstinence from drinks, eating dry biscuit, which creates no thirst, and strong frictions four or five times a-day. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. A composition of fine flower, almonds, and sugar, made by the confectioners.

To BISECT. v. a. [from bis and seco, to cut, Lat.] To divide into two parts.

BISECTION. n. f. [from the verb.] A geometrical term, signifying the division of any quantity into two equal parts.

BISHOP. n. f. [From episcopus, Lat. the Saxons formed biscop, which was afterward softened into bishop.] One of the head order of the clergy.

A bishop is an overseer, or superintendant, of religious matters in the christian church. Ayliffe.
You shall find him well accompany'd
With reverend fathers, and well learned bishops.
Shakspeare.

Their zealous superstition thinks, or pretends, they cannot do God a greater service, than to destroy the primitive, apostolical, and anciently universal government of the church by bishops.
K. Charles.

In case a bishop should commit treason and felony, and forfeit his estate, with his life, the lands of his bishoprick remain still in the church. South.

On the word bishop, in French evêque, I would observe, that there is no natural connexion between the sacred office and the letters or sound; for evêque, and bishop, signify the same office, though there is not one letter alike in them. Watts' Logic.

BISHOP. n. f. A cant word for a mixture of wine, oranges, and sugar.

Fine oranges,
Well roasted, with sugar and wine in a cup, They'll make a sweet bishop, when gentlefolks
sup. Swift.

I have bit, or bitten. [bican, Saxon.]

1. To crush, or pierce with the teeth.
My very enemy's dog,
Though he had bit me, should have stood that night Against my fire. Shakspeare.
Such smiling rogues as these,
Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain,
Too intricate to unloose. Shakspeare.
These are the youths that thunder at a playhouse, and fight for bitten apples. Shakspeare.
He falls; his arms upon the body found,
And with his bloody teeth he bites the ground.
Dryden.

There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone, who is now indeed recovered. Tatler.
Their soul mouths have not opened their lips without a falsity; though they have showed their teeth as if they would bite off my nose. Arbutnot.

2. To give pain by cold,
Here feel we the icy phang,
And churlish chiding, of the winter's wind;
Which when it bites and blows upon my body,
Even till I shrink with cold, I smile. Shakspeare.
Full fifty years, harness'd in rugged steel,
I have endur'd the biting winter's blast,
And the severer heats of parching summer. Rome.

3. To hurt or pain with reproach.
Each port with a different talent writes;
One praises, one instructs, another bites. Ros.

4. To cut; to wound.
I have seen the day, with my good biting fault-chion
I would have made them skip. Shakspeare.

acid taste.
It may be the first water will have more of the scent, as more fragrant; and the second more of the taste, as more bitter, or biting.
Bacon.

6. To cheat; to trick; to defraud: a low phrase.
Asleep and naked as an Indian lay,
An honest factor stole a gem away:
He pledg'd it to the knight; the knight had wit,
So kept the diamond, and the rogue was bit.
Pope.
If you had allowed half the fine gentlemen to have conversed with you, they would have been strangely bit, while they thought only to fall in love with a fair lady. Pope.

BIT

BITE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The seizure of any thing by the teeth.
Does he think he can endure the everlasting burnings, or arms himself against the bites of the never-dying worm? South.
Nor dogdays parching hear, that splits the rocks,
Is half so harmful as the greedy flocks;
Their venom'd bite, and scars indented on the flocks. Dryden's Virgil's Georgicks.

2. The act of a fish that takes the bait.
I have known a very good fisher angle diligently four or six hours for a river carp, and not have a bite. Walton.

3. A cheat; a trick; a fraud: in low and vulgar language.
Let a man be ne'er so wise,
He may be caught with soter lies;
For, take it in its proper light,
'Tis just what coxcombs call a bite. Swift.

4. A sharper; one who commits frauds.

BITER. n. f. [from bite.]

1. He that bites.
Great barkers are no biters. Camden.

2. A fish apt to take the bait.

own kind; and you may therefore easily believe him to be a bold biter. Walton.

3. A tricker; a deceiver.
A biter is one who tells you a thing you have no reason to disbelieve in itself, and perhaps has given you, before he bit you, no reason to disbelieve it for his saying it; and, if you give him credit, laughs in your face, and triumphs that he has deceived you. He is one who thinks you a fool, because you do not think him a knave.
Spenser.

BITTACLE. n. f. A frame of timber in the steerage of a ship, where the com-pafs is placed. DiB.

BITTER. adj. [bicep, Saxon.]

1. Having a hot, acrid, biting taste, like wormwood.
Bitter things are apt rather to kill than engender putrefaction. Bacon's Natural History.
Though a man in a fever should, from sugar, have a bitter taste, which, at another time, produces a sweet one; yet the idea of bitter, in that man's mind, would be as distinct from the idea of sweet, as if he had tasted only gall. Locke.

2. Sharp; cruel; severe.
Friends now fast sworn,
Unseparable, shall within this hour,
On a dissolution of a doir, break out
To bitter enmity. Shakspeare.
Husbands, love your wives, and be not bitter against them. Catharine.
The word of God, instead of a bitter, teaches us a charitable zeal. Spence.

3. Calamitous; miserable.
Noble friends and fellows, whom to leave
Is only bitter to me, only dying;
Go with me, like good angels, to my end. Shak.
A dire induction am I witness to;
And will to France, hoping the consequence
Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical. Shakspeare.
And thus the bitter consequence: for know,
The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command Transgress, inevitably thou shalt die. Par. Lost.
Tell him, that it I bear my bitter fate,
'Tis to behold his vengeance for my son. Dryden.

contracted more bitterness and sourness than formerly, and were more relieved towards the king's commissioners. Clarendon.

4. Satire; piquancy; keenness of reproach.
Some think their wits have been asleep, except they dart out somewhat piquant, and to the quick: men ought to find the difference between sainness and bitterness. Bacon.

5. Sorrow; vexation; affliction.
There appears much joy in him, even so much,
that joy could not show itself modest enough,
without a badge of bitterness. Shakspeare.
They shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall he in bitterness see him, as one that is in bitterness for his first-born.
Zech.
Must pursue the pleasures, as they call them, of the natures, which begin in sin, are carried on with danger, and end in bitterness. Watts.
I oft, in bitterness of soul, deploir'd
My absent daughter, and my dearest lord. Pope.

BITTERSWEET. n. f. [from bitter and sweet.] An apple, which has a compound taste of sweet and bitter.
It is but a bittersweet at best, and the fine colours of the serpent do by no means make amends for the smart and poison of his sting.
South.
When I express the taste of an apple, which we call the bittersweet, none can mistake what I mean. Watts.

BITTERVETCH. n. f. [eruum, Lat.] A plant.

BITTERWORT. n. f. [gentiana, Lat.] An herb.

To BLAB. v. a. [blabber, Dutch.]

1. To tell what ought to be kept secret: it usually implies rather thoughtlessness than treachery; but may be used in either sense.

The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day
Is crept into the bosom of the sea. Shakespeare.

They dues be done, and none left out,
Ere the blabbing eastern scow,
The nice morn on the Indian sleep,
From her cabin'd loophole peep. Milton.

Nature has made man's breath no windores,
To publish what he does within doors;
Nor what dark secrets there inhabit,
Unless his own rash folly blab it. Hudibras.

Sorrow nor joy can be disguis'd by art,
Our forehead blab the secrets of our heart. Dryd.

It is unlawful to give any kind of religious worship to a creature; but the very indices of the fathers cannot escape the index expurgatorius, for blabbing to great a truth. Stirlingfleet.

Nor whisper to the tattling reeds
The blackest of all female deeds;

Nor blab it on the lonely rocks,
Where echo sits, and list'ning mocks. Swiss.

2. To tell: in a good sense. Not used.

That delightful engine of her thoughts,
That blabb'd them with such pleasing eloquence,
Is torn from forth that pretty hollow cage. Shak.

To BLAB. v. n. To tattle; to tell tales.

Your mute I'll be;
When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes not see. Shakespeare.

BLAB. n. f. [from the verb.] A tattle; a thoughtless babbler; a treacherous betrayer of secrets.

The secret man heareth many confessions; for who will open himself to a blab, or babbler? Bacon.

To have reveal'd
Secrets of man, the secrets of a friend,
Contempt and scorn of all, to be excluded
All friendship, and avoided as a blab. Milton.

Whoever thence me a very inquisitive body, I'll shew him a blab, and one that shall make privacy as publick as a proclamation. L'Estrange.

allusions are frequently made.

That huge great body which the giant bore
Was vanquish'd quite, and of that monstrous mass

A bladder but moderately filled with air, and strongly tied, being held near the fire, grew exceeding turgid and hard; but being brought nearer to the fire, it suddenly broke, with so loud a noise as made us for a while after almost deaf. Boyle.

3. It is usual for those, that learn to swim, to support themselves with blown bladders.

I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
These many summers in a sea of glory,
But far beyond my depth: my high-blown pride
At length broke under me. Shakespeare.

4. A blister; a pustule.

BLA'DDER-NUT. n. f. [Staphylocodendron, Lat.] A plant.

BLADDER-SENA. n. f. [colutea, Lat.] A plant.

BLADE. n. f. [blad, bled, Sax. bled, Fr.]

The spire of grafs before it grows to seed; the green shoots of corn which rise from the seed. This seems to me the primitive signification of the word blade; from which, I believe, the blade of a sword was first named, because of its similitude in shape; and, from the blade of a sword, that of other weapons or tools.

There is hardly found a plant that yieldeth a red juice in the blade or ear, except it be the tree that beareth sanguis dracanis. Bacon.

Send in the feeding flocks betimes t' invade
The rising bulk of the luxuriant blade. Dryden.

If we were able to dive into her secret recesses, we should find that the smallest blade of grass, or most contemptible weed, has its particular use.

Hung on every spray, on every blade

Of grafs, the myriad dewdrops twinkle round. Thomson.

BLADE. n. f. [blatte, Germ. blad, Dutch.]

1. The sharp or striking part of a weapon or instrument, distinct from the handle.
It is usually taken for a weapon, and so called probably from the likeness of a sword blade to a blade of grafs. It is commonly applied to the knife.

He fought all round about, his thirsty blade
To bathe in blood of faithless enemy. F. Queen.

She knew the virtue of her blade, nor would Pollute her sabre with ignoble blood. Dryden.

Be his this sword, whose blade of brass displays
A ruddy gleam, whose hilt a silver blaze. Pope.

2. A brisk man, either fierce or gay, called so in contempt. So we say mettle for courage.

You'll find yourself mistaken, Sir, if you'll take upon you to judge of these blades by their garbs, looks, and outward appearance.

Then turning about to the hangman, he said,
Dispatch me, I prithee, this troublesome blade. Prior.

BLADE of the shoulder. } n. f. The bone

BLADEBONE. } called by anatomi-mists the scapula, or scapular bone.

He fell most furiously on the broiled relics of a shoulder of mutton, and commonly called a bladetomb. Pope.

TO BLADE. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish or fit with a blade.

BLA'DED. adj. [from blade.] Having blades or spires.

Her silver visage in the wat'ry glass
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grafs, Shakf.

As where the lightning runs along the ground,
Nor bladed grafs, nor bearded corn succeeds,
But scales of scurf and putrefaction breeds. Dryd.

BLAIN. n. f. [blegene, Sax. bleyne, Dutch.]

A pustule; a botch; a blister.

Itches, blains,

Sow all th' Athenian bosoms, and the crop
Be general leprosy. Shakespeare.

Botches and blains must all his flesh imbosc,
And all his people. Milton.

Whence'er I hear a rival nam'd,
I feel my body all inflam'd;

Which breaking out in boils and blains,
Wish yellow with my linen stains. Swift.

BLA'MABLE. adj. [from blame.] Culpable; faulty.

Virtue is placed between two extremes, which are on both sides equally blamable. Dryden.

BLA'MABLENESS. n. f. [from blamable.] Fault; the state of being liable to blame; culpableness; faultiness.

BLA'MABLY. adv. [from blamable.] Cul-pably; in a manner liable to censure.

A process may be carried on against a person, that is maliciously or blamably absent, even to a definitive sentence. Argle.

TO BLAME. v. a. [blamer, Fr.]

1. To censure; to charge with a fault; it generally implies a slight censure.

Our pow'r

Shall do a court'sy to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not controul. Shakespeare.

Porphyrus, you too far did tempt your late;
'Tis true, your duty to me it became;

But, praising that, I must your conduct blame. Dryden.

Each finding, like a friend,
Something to blame, and something to commend. Pope.

2. To blame has usually the particle for before the fault.

The reader must not blame me for making use here all along of the word sentiment. Locke.

3. Sometimes, but rarely, of.

Tomorrow he blamed of inconsiderate rashness, for that he would busy himself in matters not belonging to his vocation. Kestler's History of the Turks.

BLAME. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Imputation of a fault.

In arms the praise of success is shared among many; yet the blame of misadventures is charged upon one. Hayward.

They lay the blame on the poor little ones, sometimes passionately enough, to divert it from themselves. Locke.

2. Crime; that which produces or deserves censure.

Who would not judge us to be discharged of all blame, which are content to have no great fault, even by their very word and testimony, in whose eyes no fault of ours hath ever hitherto been accustomed to seem small. Hooke.

I unspeak mine own detraction; here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,

For strangers to my nature. Shakespeare.

3. Hurt. Not in use.

Therewith upon his crest
With rigour so outrageous he smit,

That a large share it hew'd out of the rest,
And glancing down his shield, from blamewhim fairly blest. Fairy Queen.

4. There is a peculiar structure of this word, in which it is not very evident whether it be a noun or a verb, but I conceive it to be the noun. To blame, in French a fort; culpable; worthy of censure.

You were to blame, I must be plain with you,
To part so slightly with your wife's first gift. Shakespeare.

I do not ask whether they were mistaken; but, whether they were so blame in the manner.

Stirlingfleet.

Now we should hold them much so blame,
If they went back before they came. Prior.

BLAMEFUL. adj. [from blame and full.]

Criminal; guilty; meriting blame.

Is not the cause of these timeless deaths
As blameful as the executioner? Shakespeare.

Bluntwitted lord, ignoble in demeanour,
If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much,
Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl. Shakespeare.

BLAMELESSLY. adv. [from blameless.] Innocently; without crime.

It is the wilful opposing explicit articles, and not the not believing them when not revealed, or not with that conviction, against which he cannot blamelessly, without pertinacy, hold out, that will bring danger of ruin on any. Hammond.

BLAMELESSNESS. n. f. [from blameless.] Innocence; exemption from censure.

Having resolved with him in Homer, that all is chargeable on Jupiter and fate, they inter, with him, the blameless of the inferior agent. Hammond.

BLAMELESS. adj. [from blame.]

1. Guiltless; innocent; exempt from censure or blame.

She found out the righteous, and preserved him blameless unto God. Wisdom.

The flames ascend on either altar clear,
While thus the blameless maid address'd her pray'r. Dryden.

Such a lessening of our coin will deprive great numbers of blameless men of a fifth part of their estates. Locke.

2. Sometimes it is used with of.

We will be blameless of this thine oath. Joshua.

BLAMER. n. f. [from blame.] One that blames or finds fault; a censurer.

In me you've hallowed a pagan muse,
And denison'd a stranger, who mistaught
By blamers of the times they marr'd, hath sought Virtues in corners. Drum.

BLAMEWORTHY. adj. [from blame and worthy.] Culpable; blamable; worthy of blame or censure.

Although the same should be blameworthy, yet this age hath forbore to incur the danger of any such blame. Hooker.

TO BLANCH. v. a. [blanchir, Fr.]

1. To whiten; to change from some other colour to white.

You can behold such fights,
And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks,
When mine is blanch'd with fear. Shakespeare.

A way of whitening was cheaply may be of use;
and we have for down the practice of tradesmen who blanch it. Boyle.

And sin's black dye seems blanch'd by age to virtue. Dryden.

2. To strip or peel such things as have husks.

Their suppers may be husket, raisins of the sun,
and a few blanched almonds. Wifeman.

3. To slur; to balk; to pass over; to shift away. Not in use.

The judges thought it dangerous to admit ifs and ands, to qualify treason; whereby every one might express his malice, and blanch his danger. Bacon.

You are not transported in an action that warms the blood, and is appearing holy, to blanch, or take for admitted, the point of lawfulness. Bacon.

TO BLANCH. v. n. To evade; to shift; to speak soft.

Optimi consilii mortui; books will speak plain when counsellors blanch. Bacon.

BLANCHER. n. f. [from blanch.] A whitener. Ditt.

BLAND. adj. [blandus, Lat.] Soft; mild; gentle.

In her face excuse

Came prologue, and apology too prompt;
Which, with bland words at will, she thus address'd. Milton.

And even calm
Perpetual reign'd, gave what the æthereal bland
Breath'd o'er the blue expanse. Thomson.

TO BLANDISH. v. a. [blanchir, Lat.] To smooth; to soften. I have met with this word in no other passage.

Mustering all her wiles,
With blandish'd parties, feminine assaults,
Tongue-batteries, she furcous'd not day nor night
To storm me over-watch'd, and weary'd out. Milton.

BLANDISHMENT. n. f. [from blandish; blanditie, Lat.]

1. Act of fondness; expression of tenderness by gesture.

The little babe up in his arms he hent,
Who, with sweet pleasure and bold blandishment,
"Gan smile. Spenser.

Each bird and beast, behold Approaching two and two; these caw'ring low
With blandishment. Milton.

2. Soft words; kind speeches.

He was both well and fair spoken, and would use strange sweetness and blandishment of words, where he desired to effect or persuade any thing that he took to heart. Bacon.

3. Kind treatment; care.

Him Dido now with blandishment detains;
But I suspect the town where Juno reigns. Dryden.
In order to bring those infidels within the wide circle of whiggish community, neither blandishments nor promises are omitted. Swift.

BLANK. adj. [blanc, Fr. derived by Ménage from albianus, thus: albianus, albianicus, bianicus, biancus, bianco, blancus, blancus, blanc; by others, from blanc, which, in Danish, signifies shining; in conformity to which, the Germans have blancker, to shine; the Saxons, blæcan; and the English, bleach, to whiten.]

1. White.

To the blank moon
Her office they prefer'd; to th' other five
Their planetary motions. Milton.

2. Without writing; unwritten; empty of all marks.

Our substitutes at home shall have blank characters,

Whereto, when they know that men are rich,
They shall subscribe them for large sums of gold. Shakespeare.

Upon the debtor side, I find innumerable articles; but, upon the creditor side, little more than blank paper. Addison.

3. Pale; confused; crushed; dispirited; subdued; depressed.

There without such boast, or sign of joy,
Solicitous and blank, he thus began. Milton.

Adam, soon as he heard
The fatal trespass done by Eve, amaz'd, Astonied stood, and blank, while horror chill
Ran through his veins, and all his joints relax'd. Milton.

But now no face divine contentment wears;
'Tis all blank sadness, or continual fears. Pope.

4. Without rhyme; where the rhyme is blanched, or missed.

The lady shall say her mind freely, or the blank verse shall halt for it. Shakespeare.

Long have your ears been fill'd with troick parts;
Blood and blank verse have harden'd all your hearts. Addison.

Our blank verse, where there is no rhyme to support the expression, is extremely difficult to such as are not masters in the tongue. Addison.

BLANK. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A void space on paper.

I cannot write a paper full as I used to do; and yet I will not forgive a blank of half an inch from you. Swift.

2. A lot, by which nothing is gained; which has no prize marked upon it.

If you have heard your general talk of Rome, And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks.
My name hath touch'd your ears. Shakespeare.

Who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious. Timothy.

Even that blasphemer himself would inwardly reverence his reprover, as he in his heart really despises him for his cowardly base silence. Saunders.

Deny the curst blasphemer's tongue to rage,
And turn God's fury from an impious age. Ticket.

Should each blasphemer quite escape the rod,
Because the insult's not to man, but God. Pope.

BLASPHEMOUS. adj. [from blaspheme.]

It is usually spoken with the accent on the first syllable, but used by Milton with it on the second.] Impiously irreverent with regard to God.

O man, take heed how thou the god dost move,
To cause full wrath, which thou can'st not resist;
Blasphemous words the speaker vain do prove. Sidney.

And dar'st thou to the Son of God propound,
To worship thee accurst; now more accurst
For this attempt, bolder than that on Eve,
And more blasphemous. Milton.

A man can hardly pass the streets, without having his ears grated with horrid and blasphemous oaths and curses. Tillotson.

That any thing that wears the name of a christian, or but of man, should venture to own such a villainous, impudent, and blasphemous assertion in the face of the world, as this! Saunders.

BLASPHEMOUSLY. adv. [from blaspheme.] Impiously; with wicked irreverence.

Where is the right use of his reason, while he would blasphemously set up to controul the commands of the Almighty? Swift.

Blasphemy, strictly and properly, is an offering of some indignity, or injury, unto God himself, either by words or writing. Attyf.

But that my heart's on future mischief set,
I would speak blasphemy, ere bid you fly;
But fly you must. Shakespeare.

Intrinsic goodness consists in accordance, and fits in contrariety, to the secret will of God; or else God could not be defined good, so far as his thoughts and secrets, but only superficially good, as far as he is pleased to reveal himself, which is perfect blasphemy to imagine. Hammond.

BLAST. n. s. [from blæst, Sax. blasen, Germ. to blow.]

1. A gust or puff of wind.

They that stand high have many blasts to shake them;

And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces. Shakespeare.

Welcome, then,
Thou unsubstantial air, that I embrace;
The wretch that thou hast blown unto the worst Owes nothing to thy blasts. Shakespeare.

Perhaps thy fortune doth controul the winds,
Doth loose or bind their blasts in secret cave. Fairfax.

Three ships were hurry'd by the southern blast,

2. The sound made by blowing any instrument of wind music.

In peace there's nothing to become a man,
As modest stillness and humility;
But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
Then imitate the action of the tyger. Shakespeare.

He blew his trumpet—the angelic blast
Fill'd all the regions. Milton.

The Velline fountains, and sulphureous Nar, Shake at the hallow blast, the signal of the war. Dryden.

Whether there be two different goddesses called Fame, or one goddess founding two different trumpets, it is certain villainy has as good a title to a blast from the proper trumpet, as virtue has from the former. Swift.

And maidens bleach their summer smocks. Shak.

Should I not seek
The clemency of some more temp'rate clime,
To purge my gloom; and, by the sun refin'd,
Bask in his beams, and bleach me in the wind?
Dryden.

TO BLEACH. v. n. To grow white; to grow white in the open air.

The white sheet bleaching in the open field.
Shakespeare.

For there are various penances enjoind;
And some are hung to bleach upon the wind;
Some plung'd in waters.
Dryden.

The deadly winter seizes; shuts up sense;
Lays him along the snows, a stiffen'd corse,
Stretch'd out, and bleaching in the northern blast.
Thomson.

BLEAK. adj. [blac, blac, Saxon.]

1. Pale.
2. Cold; chill; cheerless.

Invent the north
To make his bleak winds kiss my parched lips,
And comfort me with cold. Shakespeare.

The goddess that in rural shrine
Dwell'd here with Pan, or Sylvan, by bleak song Forbidding every bleak unkindly fog
To touch the prosperous growth of this tall wood.
Milton.

Her desolation presents us with nothing but bleak and barren prospects. Addison.

1. To make a current of air.

At his sight the mountains are shaken, and at his will the south wind bloweth. Æchus.

Fruits, for long keeping, gather before they are full ripe, and in a day, towards noon, and when the wind bloweth not south; and when the moon is in decrease. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

By the fragrant winds that blow
O'er th' Elysian flow'rs. Pope's St. Cecilia.

2. This word is used sometimes impersonally with it.

It blew a terrible tempest at sea once, and there was one seaman praying. L'Estrange.

If it blows a happy gale, we must set up all our sails; though it sometimes happens that our natural heat is more powerful than our care and correctness. Dryden.

3. To pant; to puff; to be breathless.

Here's Mrs. Page at the door, sweating and blowing, and looking wildly. Shakspere.

Each aching nerve refuse the lance to throw,
And each spent courier at the chariot blow. Pope.

4. To breathe.

Says the satyr, if you have gotten a trick of blowing hot and cold out of the same mouth, I've e'en done with ye. L'Estrange.

The priests shall blow with the trumpet. Josiah.

When ye blow an alarm, then the camps that lie on the east parts shall go forward. Numbers.

7. To blow over. To pass away without effect.

Storms, though they blow over divers times, yet may fall at last. Bacon's Essays.

When the storm is blown over,

How blest is the swain,
Who begins to discover

An end of his pain. Cræmille.

But those clouds being now happily blown over, and our sun clearly shining out again, I have recovered the scapula. Denham.

8. To blow up. To fly into the air by the force of gunpowder.

On the next day, some of the enemy's magazines blew up; and it is thought they were destroyed on purpose by some of their men.

Tatler.

To BLOW. v. a.

1. To drive by the force of the wind: with a particle to fix the meaning.

Though you untie the winds,
Though blasted corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down,

Though castles topple on their warders heads.

Macbeth.

Fair daughter, blow away those mists and clouds,
And let thy eyes shine forth in their full lustre.

Denham.

These primitive heirs of the christian church could not so easily blow off the doctrine of passive obedience. South.

And Tom bears logs into the hall,
And milk comes frozen home in pail.

Shaksp.

7. To spread by report.

But never was there a man, of his degree,
So much esteem'd, so well belov'd, as he:
So gentle of condition was he known,
That through the court his courtesy was blown.

Dryden.

8. To blow out. To extinguish by wind or the breath.

Your breath first kindled the dead coal of war,
And brought in matter that should feed this fire:
And now 'tis far too huge to be blown out
With that same weak wind which enkindled it.

Moon, slip behind some cloud, some tempest
rife,
And blow out all the stars that light the skies.

9. To blow up. To raise or swell with breath.

A plague of fighting and grief! it blows a man up like a bladder.
Before we had exhausted the receiver, the bladder appeared as full as if blown up with a quill.

It was my breath that blew this tempest up,
Upon your stubborn usage of the pope.
An empty bladder gravitates no more than when blown up, but somewhat less; yet descends more easily, because with less resistance.

10. To blow up. To inflate with pride.

Blown up with the conceit of his merit, he did not think he had received good measure from the king.

An officer on board a ship, who has charge of all her rigging, ropes, cables, anchors, sails, flags, colours, pendants, &c. He also takes care of the long-boat, and its furniture, and steers her either by himself or his mate. He calls out the several gangs and companies to the execution of their watches, works, and spells; and he is also a kind of provost-marshal, seizes and punishes all offenders, that are sentenced by the captain, or court-martial of the whole fleet. Harris.

Sometimes the meanest boatswain may help to preserve the ship from sinking.

Howell's Pre-eminence of Parliament.

To BOB. v. a. [of uncertain etymology: Skinner deduces it from bobo, foolish, Span.]

1. To cut. Junius. Whence bobtail.

2. To beat; to drub; to bang.

Those bastard Britons, whom our fathers Have in their own land beaten, bob'd, and thump'd. Shakspere.

3. To cheat; to gain by fraud.

I have bobbed his brain more than he has beat my bones. Shaksp.

Live, Rodrigo!

He calls me to a restitution large
Of gold and jewels that I bob'd from him,
As gifts to Desdemona. Shakspere.

Here we have been worrying one another, who should have the booty, till this cursed fox has bobbed us both on't. L'Estrange.

To BOB. v. n. To play backward and forward; to play loosely against any thing.

And sometimes tuck I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab;
And when she drinks against her lips I bob,
And on her wither'd dowlap pour the ale. Shakspere's Midsummer Night's Dream.

They comb, and then they order ev'ry hair;

You may tell her,
I'm rich in jewels, rings, and bobbing pearls, Pluck'd from Mours ears. Dryden.

BOB. n. f. [from the verb neuter.]

1. Something that hangs so as to play loosely; generally an ornament at the ear; a pendant; an ear-ring.

The gaudy gossip, when she's set agog,
In jewels dress'd, and at each ear a bob. Dryden.

This bodes some strange eruption to our state. Hamlet.

You have oppos'd their false policy with true and great wisdom; what they boded would be a mischief to us, you are providing shall be one of our principal strengths. Spenser's Sermons.

It happen'd once, a boding prodigy!
A swarm of bees that cut the liquid sky
Upon the topmast branch in clouds alight. Dryd.

If fiery red his glowing globe descends,
High winds and furious tempests he portends;
But if his cheeks are twain with livid blue,
He bodes wet weather by his wat'ry hue. Dryden.

To BODE. v. n. To be an omen; to foreshow.

Sir, give me leave to say, whatever now
The omen prove, it boded well to you. Dryden.

BO'DEMENT. n. f. [from bode.] Portent; omen; prognostick.

This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girl
Makes all these bodements. Shakspere.
Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until Great Birnam wood to Dunsinane's high hill Shall come against him—

That will never be:
Sweet bodements, good. Shakspere.

To BODGE. v. n. [a word in Shakspere, which is perhaps corrupted from boggle.]

To boggle; to stop; to fail.

With this we charg'd again; but out alas!
We bodg'd again: as I have seen swan,
With bootless labour, swim against the tide. Shakspere.

BO'DICE. n. f. [from bodies.] Stays; a waistcoat quilted with whalebone, worn by women.

Her bodice half way she unlac'd;
About his arms she flung it fast
The filken band, and held him fast. Prior.
This conformation should keep ignorant nurses and bodice makers from meddling. Lodge.

BO'DILESS. adj. [from body.] Incorporal; having no body.

They bodiless and immaterial are,
And can be unity lodg'd within our minds. Dewar.

This is the very coinage of our brain;

This bodiless creation scantly
Is very cunning in. Shakspere.

These are but shadows,
Phantoms bodiless and vain,
Empty visions of the brain. Swift.

BO'DILY. adj. [from body.]

1. Corporeal; containing body.

What resemblance could wood or stone bear to a spirit void of all sensible qualities, and bodily dimensions? South.

2. Relating to the body, not the mind.

Of such as referred to our Saviour Christ, being present on earth, there came not any unto him with better success, for the benefit of their souls everlasting happiness, than they whose bodily necessities gave occasion of seeking relief. Hosier.

Virtue atones for bodily defects; beauty is nothing worth, without a mind. L'Estrange.

As clearness of the bodily eye doth dispose it for a quicker sight; so doth freedom from lust and passion dispose us for the most perfect acts of reason. Tillotson.

I would not have children much heaten for their faults, because I would not have them think bodily pain the greatest punishment. Lodge.

3. Real; actual.

Whatever hath been thought on in this state,
That could be brought to bodily act, ere Rome
Had circumvention. Shakspere.

BO'DILY. adv. Corporeally; united with matter.

It is his human nature, in which the godhead dwells bodily, that is advanced to their honours, and to this empire. Watts.

BO'DKIN. n. f. [boddiken, or small body; Skinner.]

1. An instrument with a small blade and sharp point, used to bore holes.

The bodkin, comb, and essence to prepare:
For this your locks in paper durance bound. Pope.

BO'DY. n. f. [bodix, Saxon; it originally signified the height or stature of a man.]

1. The material substance of an animal, opposed to the immaterial soul.

All the valiant men arose, and went all night, and took the body of Saul, and the bodies of his sons, from the wall. Samuel.

Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Matthew.

By custom, practice, and patience, all difficulties and hardships, whether of body or of fortune, are made easy. L'Estrange.

2. Matter; opposed to spirit.

3. A person; a human being; whence somebody and nobody.

Surely, a wife body's part it were not to put out his fire, because his foolish neighbour, from whom he borrowed wherewith to kindle it, might say, were it not for me thou wouldst freeze. Hosier.

A deslow'rd maid!
And by an eminent body, that enfore'd
The law against it! Shakspere.

'Tis a passing shame,
That I, unworthy body as I am,
Should censure thus on lovely gentlemen. Shak.

No body seeth me; what need I to fear? the Most High will not remember my sins. Ecclus.

All civility and reason obliged every body to submit. Clarendon.

Good may be drawn out of evil, and a body's life may be saved without having any obligation to his preserver. L'Estrange.

4. Reality : opposed to representation. A scriptural sense.

A shadow of things to come ; but the body is of Christ. Coleffins.

5. A collective mass ; a joint power.

There is in the knowledge both of God and man this certainty, that life and death have divided between them the whole body of mankind. Hooker.

There were so many disaffected persons of the nobility, that there might a body start up for the king. Clarendon.

When pigmies pretend to form themselves into a body, it is time for us, who are men of figure, to look about us. Addison's Guardian.

6. The main army ; the battle : distinct from the wings, van, and rear.

The van of the king's army was led by the general and Wilnot ; in the body was the king and the prince ; and the rear consisted of one thousand foot, commanded under colonel Thelwell. Clarendon.

7. A corporation : a number of men united by some common tie.

I shall now mention a particular wherein your whole body will be certainly against me ; and the laity, almost to a man, on my side. Swift.

Nothing was more common, than to hear that reverend body charged with what is inconsistent ; despised for their poverty, and hated for their riches. Swift.

8. The main part ; the bulk : as, the body, or hull, of a ship ; the body of a coach ; the body of a church ; the body, or trunk, of a man ; the body, or trunk, of a tree.

Thence sent rich merchandizes by boat to Babylon ; from whence, by the body of Euphrates, as far as it tended westward ; and, afterward, by a branch thereof. Raleigh.

This city has navigable rivers, that run up into the body of Italy ; they might supply many countries with fish. Addison.

9. A substance ; matter, as distinguished from other matter.

Even a metalline body, and therefore much more a vegetable or animal, may, by fire, be turned into water. Boyle.

2. The vessel in which any thing is boiled.

This coffee room is much frequented ; and there are generally several pots and boilers before the fire. Woodward.

- BO'ISTEROUS. adj. [byster, furious, Dutch.]

1. Violent ; loud ; roaring ; stormy.

By a divine instinct, men's minds mistrust Ensuing danger ; as by proof we see
The waters swell before a boisterous storm. Shakespeare.

As when loud winds a well-grown oak would rend
Up by the roots, this way and that they bend
His reeling trunk, and with a boisterous found, Scatter his leaves, and strew them on the ground. Wallier.

2. Turbulent ; tumultuous ; furious.

Spirit of peace,
Wherefore do you to ill translate yourself
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war ? Shakespeare.

His sweetness won a more regard Unto his place, than all the boisterous moods
That ignorant greatness practiseth. Ben Jonson.

God into the hands of their deliverer.
Puts invincible might,
To quell the mighty of the earth, th' oppressor,
The brute and boisterous force of violent men. Milton.

Still must I beg thee not to name Sempromius :
Lucia, I like not that loud boisterous man. Addison.

3. Unwieldy ; clumsily violent.

His boisterous club, so buried in the ground,
He could not rear up again so light,
But that the knight him at advantage found. Fairy Queen.

BOLD. adj. [bold, Saxon.]

1. Daring; brave; stout; courageous; magnanimous; fearless; intrepid.

The wicked see when no man pursueth; but the righteous are bold as a lion. Proverbs.

I have seen the councils of a noble country grow bold, or timorous, according to the fits of his good or ill health that managed them. Temple.

2. Executed with spirit, and without mean caution.

These nervous, bold; those, languid and remiss. Reverend.

The cathedral church is a very bold work, and a master-piece of Gothic architecture. Addis.

3. Confident; not scrupulous; not timorous.

We were bold in our God to speak unto you the gospel of God with much contention. 1 Thes.

I can be bold to say, that this age is adorned with some men of that judgment, that they could open new and undiscovered ways to knowledge. Locke.

4. Impudent; rude.

In thy prosperity he will be as thyself, and will be bold over thy servants. If thou be brought low, he will be against thee. Eccles.

5. Licentious; such as show great liberty of fiction, or expression.

The figures are bold even to temerity. Cowley.
Which no bold tales of gods or monsters swell,
But human passions, such as with us dwell. Walker.

6. Standing out to the view; striking to the eye.

Catachreses and hyperboles are to be used judiciously, and placed in poetry, as heightenings and shadows in painting, to make the figure bolder, and cause it to stand off to fight. Dryden.

7. Open; smooth; even; level: a sailor's term.

Her dominions have bold accessible coasts. Howell.

8. To make bold. To take freedoms: a phrase not grammatical, though common. To be bold is better; as, I was bold to tell the house, that scandalous livings make scandalous ministers.

I have made bold to send to your wife;
My suit is, that the will to Desdemona Procure me some access. Shakespeare.

Making so bold,
My fears forgetting manners, to unseal
Their grand commission. Shakespeare.

And were y' as good as George a Green,
I shall make bold to turn agen. Hudibras.
I durst not make thus bold with Ovid, lest some future Milbourn should arise. Dryden.

Some men have the fortune to be esteemed wits, only for making bold to scold at these things, which the greatest part of mankind reverence. Tillotson.

To BO'LDEN. v. a. [from bold.] To make bold; to give confidence.

Quick inventors, and fair ready speakers, being boldened with their present abilities to say more, and perchance better too, at the sudden for that present, than any other can do, use less help of diligence and study. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

I am much too vent'rous
In tempting of your patience, but am bolden'd
Under your promis'd pardon. Shakespeare.

BO'LDFACE. n. f. [from bold and face.] Impudence; sauciness: a term of reproach and reprehension.

How now, boldface! cries an old trot: firrah,
we eat our own lens, I'd have you know;
was you eat, you steal. L'Estrange.

BO'LD Faced. adj. [from bold and face.] Impudent.

I have seen those filliciest of creatures; and, seeing their rare works, I have seen enough to confute all the boldfaced atheists of this age. Bramhall against Hobbes.

BO'LDLY. adv. [from bold.]

1. In a bold manner; with courage; with spirit.

Thus we may boldly speak, being strengthened with the example of so reverend a prelate. Hooker.

I speak to subjects, and a subject speaks,
Stir'd up by heav'n, thus boldly for his king. Shakespeare.

2. It may perhaps be sometimes used, in a bad sense, for impudently.

BO'LDNESS. n. f. [from bold.]

1. Courage; bravery; intrepidity; spirit; fortitude; magnanimity; daringness.

Her horse she rid so, as might shew a fearful boldness, daring to do that which she knew not how to do. Sidney.

2. Exemption from caution and scrupulous nicety.

The boldness of the figures is to be hidden sometimes in the address of the poet, that they may work their effect upon the mind. Dryden.

3. Freedom; liberty.

Great is my boldness of speech toward you;
great is my glorying in you. 2 Corinthians.

4. Confident trust in God.

We have boldness and access with confidence,
by the faith of him. Ephesians.

Having therefore boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus. Hebrews.

5. Assurance; freedom from bashfulness; confident mien.

Wonderful is the case of boldness in civil business: what first? Boldness. What second and third? Boldness. And yet boldness is a child of ignorance and baseness, far inferior to other parts. Bacon.

Sure, if the guilt were theirs, they could not charge thee
With such a gallant boldness; if 'twere thine,
Thou couldst not bear't with such a silent scorn. Drumham.

His distance, though it does not instruct him to think wiser than other princes, yet it helps him to speak with more boldness what he thinks. Temple.

Boldness is the power to speak or do what we intend, before others, without fear or disorder. Locke.

6. Impudence.

That moderation, which useth to suppress boldness, and to make them conquer that suffer. Hooker.

BOLE. n. f.

1. The body or trunk of a tree.

All fell upon the high-hair'd oaks, and down their curled bows
Fell hussling to the earth; and up went all the boles and boughs. Chapman.

But when the smoother bole from knots is free,
We make a deep incision in the tree. Dryden.

View well this tree, the queen of all the grove;
How vast her bole, how wide her arms are spread;
How high above the rest she shoots her head! Dryden.

2. A kind of earth.

Bole Armeniack is an astringent earth, which takes its name from Armenia, the country from which we have it. Woodward.

3. A measure of corn, containing six bushels.

Of good barley put eight boles, that is, about six English quarters, in a stone trough. Moretime.

BO'LLIS. n. f. [Latin.]

Bollis is a great fiery ball, swiftly hurried through the air, and generally drawing a tail after it. Aristotle calls it capra. There have often been immense balls of this kind. Musebroeck.

BOLL. n. f. A round stalk or stem; as, a boll of flax.

To BOLL. v. n. [from the noun.] To rise in a stalk.

And the flax and the barley was smitten: for the barley was in the ear, and the flax was balled. Exodus.

BO'LLSTER. n. f. [bolytpe, Sax. bollster, Dutch.]

1. Something laid on the bed, to raise and support the head; commonly a bag filled with down or feathers.

Pethaps some cold bank is her bollster now,
Or 'gainst the rugged bark of some broad elm
Leans her unpillow'd head. Milton.

This arm shall be a bollster for thy head;
I'll fetch clean straw to make a soldier's bed. Gay.

2. A pad, or quilt, to hinder any pressure, or fill up any vacancy.

Up goes her hand, and off the slip
The bollsters that supply her hips. Swift.

3. A pad, or compress, to be laid on a wound.

The bandage is the girt, which hath a bollster in the middle, and the ends tacked firmly together. Wifeman.

The bollsters of a saddle are those parts raised upon the bows, to hold the rider's thigh. Farrier's Dict.

To BO'LLSTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To support the head with a bollster.

2. To afford a bed to.

Mortal eyes do see them bollster,
More than their own. Shakespeare's Othello.

3. To hold wounds together with a compress.

The practice of bollstering the cheeks forward, does little service to the wound, and is very uneasy to the patient. Sharp.

4. To support; to hold up; to maintain. This is now an expression somewhat coarse and obsolete.

We may be made wiser by the publick persuasions grafted in men's minds, so they be used to further the truth, not to bollster error. Hooker.

The lawyer sets his tongue to file for the bollstering out of unjust causes. Hatfield.

It was the way of many to bollster up their crazy doating consciences with confidences. South.

BOLT. n. f. [boul, Dutch; bolus.]

1. An arrow; a dart shot from a cross-bow.

Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell;
It fell upon a little western flower,
Before milk-white, now purple with love's wound. Shakespeare.

The blunted bolt against the nymph he dress'd;
But with the sharp transfix'd Apollo's breast. Dryden.

2. Lightning; a thunderbolt.

Sing'd with the flames, and with the boles
transfix'd,
With native earth your blood the monsters mix'd. Dryden.

3. Bolt upright; that is, upright as an arrow.

Brush iron, native or from the mine, consisteth of long striz, about the thickness of a small knitting needle, bolt upright, like the bristles of a stiff brush. Grew.

As I stood bolt upright upon one end, one of the ladies burst out. Addison.

4. The bar of a door, so called from being straight like an arrow. We now say, shoot the bolt, when we speak of fastening or opening a door.

'Tis not in thee, to oppose the bolt Against my coming in. Shakespeare.

5. An iron to fasten the legs of a prisoner. This is, I think, corrupted from bought, or link.

Away with him to prison; lay bolts enough upon him. Shakespeare.

To BOLT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut or fasten with a bolt.

The bolted gates flew open at the blast;
The storm rush'd in, and Aëte stood aghast. Dryden.

2. To blurt out, or throw out precipitantly.

I hate when vice can bolt her arguments,
And virtue has no tongue to check her pride. Milton.

3. To fasten, as a bolt or pin; to pin; to keep together.

That I could reach the axle, where the pins are Which bolt this frame, that I might pull them out! Ben Jonson.

4. To fetter; to shackle.

It is great
To do that thing that ends all other deeds,
Which shackles accidents, and bolts up change. Shakespeare.

5. To sift, or separate the parts of any thing with a sieve. [blater, Fr.]

He now had bolted all the flour. Spenser.
In the bolting and sifting of fourteen years of power and favour, all that came out could not be pure meal. Wotton.

I cannot bolt this matter to the bray,
As Bradwardin and holy Austin can. Dryden.

6. To examine by sifting; to try out; to lay open.

It would be well bol't out, whether great resolutions may not be made upon reflections, as upon direct beams. Bacon.

The judge, or jury, or parties, or the council, or attorneys, propounding questions, beats and bolts out the truth much better than when the witness delivers only a formal series. Hale.

Time and nature will bolt out the truth of things, through all disguises. L'Estrange.

7. To purify; to purge. This is harsh.

The fanned snow,
That's bolted by the northern blast twice o'er. Shakespeare.

To BOLT. v. n. To spring out with speed and suddenness; to start out with the quickness of an arrow.

This Puck seems but a dreaming dolt,
Still walking like a ragged colt,
And oft out of a bush duth bolt,
Of purpose to deceive us. Drayton.

They erected a fort, and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest, sometimes into the forest, sometimes into the woods and fallows, and sometimes back to their den. Rassau.

As the house was all in a flame, out bolted a mouse from the ruins to save herself. L'Estrange.
I have reflected on those men who, from time to time, have shot themselves into the world. I have seen many successions of them; some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and others hissed off. Dryden.

The birds to foreign seats repair'd;
And beasts, that bolted out, and saw the forest hard. Dryden.

BOLT-ROPE. n. f. [from bolt and rope.]

Bo'LTSPRIT. n. f. A mast running out

Bo'WSPRIT. } at the head of a ship, not standing upright, but aloope. The but end of it is generally set against the foot of the foremast; so that they are a stay to one another. The length without board is sufficient to let its sails hang clear of all incumbrances. If the boltsprit fail in bad weather, the foremast cannot hold long after. Bowspit is perhaps the right spelling. Sea Dictionary.

Sometimes I'd divide,
And burn in many places; on the topmast,
The yards and boltsprit would I flame distinctly. Shakespeare.

Bo'LVUS. n. f. [βλαβη.] A form of medicine, in which the ingredients are made up into a soft mass, larger than pills, to be swallowed at once.

Keep their bodies soluble the while by clysters, lenitive boluses of cassia and manna, with syrup of violets. Hicman.

By poets we are well assur'd,
That love, alas! can never be cur'd;
A complicated heap of pills,
Despising boluses and pills. Swift.

BOMB. n. f. [bombus, Lat.]

1. A loud noise.

An upper chamber being thought weak, was supported by a pillar of iron, of the bigness of one's arm in the middle; which, if you had struck, would make a little flat noise in the room, but a great bomb in the chamber beneath. Bacon.

2. A hollow iron ball, or shell, filled with gunpowder, and furnished with a vent for a fusee, or wooden tube filled with combustible matter, to be thrown out from a mortar, which had its name from the noise it makes. The fusee, being set on fire, burns slowly till it reaches the gunpowder, which goes off at once, bursting the shell to pieces with incredible violence: whence the use of bombs in besieging towns. The largest are about eighteen inches in diameter. By whom they were invented is not known, and the time is uncertain; some fixing it to 1588, and others to 1495. Chambers.

The loud cannon misfire iron pours,
And in the slaughter-ring bomb Gradivus roars. Rowe.

To BOMB. v. a. [from the noun.] To fall upon with bombs; to bombard.

Our king thus trembles at Namur,

My lords, the senators Are sold for slaves, and their wives for bondswomen. Ben Jonson's Cataline.

BONE. n. f. [ban, Saxon.]

1. The solid part of the body of an animal.

The bones are made up of hard fibres, tied one to another by small transverse fibres, as those of the muscles. In a fetus they are porous, soft, and easily discerned. As their pores fill with a substance of their own nature, to they increase, harden, and grow close to one another. They are all spongy, and full of little cells; or are of a considerable firm thickness, with a large cavity, except the teeth; and where they are articulated, they are covered with a thin and strong membrane, called the periosteum. Each bone is much bigger at its extremity than in the middle, that the articulations might be firm, and the bones not easily put out of joint. But, because the middle of the bone should be strong, to sustain its allotted weight, and resist accidents, the fibres are there more closely compacted together, supporting one another; and the bone is made hollow, and consequently not so easily broken, as it must have been had it been solid and smaller. Quincy.

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold. Macbeth.

There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone. Tatler.

2. A fragment of meat; a bone with as much flesh as adheres to it.

Like Atop's hounds contending for the bone, Each pleaded right, and would be sold alone. Dryden.

3. To be upon the bones. To attack.

Puffs had a month's mind to be upon the bones of him, but was not willing to pick a quarrel. L'Estrange.

4. To make no bones. To make no scruple; a metaphor taken from a dog, who readily swallows meat that has no bones.

5. Bones. A sort of bobbins, made of trotter bones, for weaving bonelace.

6. Bones. Dice.

But then my study was to cog the dice, And dextrously to throw the lucky dice:

To thum ames ace, that swept my stakes away; And watch the box, for fear they should convey False bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryd.

To BONE. v. a. [from the noun.] To take out the bones from the flesh; as, the cooks boned the veal.

BONELACE. n. f. [from bone and lace; the bobbins with which lace is woven being frequently made of bones.] Flaxen lace, such as women wear on their linen.

The things you follow, and make songs on now, should be sent to knit, or sit down to bobbins or bonelace. Tatler.

We destroy the symmetry of the human figure, and foolishly contrive to call off the eye from great and real beauties, to childish gewgaw ribbands and bonelace. Spectator.

BONELESS. adj. [from bone.] Wanting bones.

I would, while it was smiling in my face, Have plucked my nipple from his boneless gums, And dash'd the brains out. Shaksp.

2. Full of bones.

BO'BY. n. f. [a word of no certain etymology. Henshaw thinks it a corruption of bull-beef, ridiculously; Skinner imagines it to be derived from bobo, foolish, Spanish. Junius finds bowbard to be an old Scottish word for a coward, a contemptible fellow; from which he naturally deduces booby: but the original of bowbard is not known.] A dull, heavy, stupid fellow; a lubber.

But one exception to this fact we find;
That booby Phaan only was unkind.
An ill-bred boatman, rough as waves and wind. Prior.

Young master next must rise to fill him wine,
And starve himself to see the booby dine. King.

BOOK. n. f. [boc, Sax. supposed from bee, a beech, because they wrote on beechen boards; as liber, in Latin, from the rind of a tree.]

1. A volume in which we read or write.

See a book of prayer in his hand;
True ornaments to know a holy man. Shaksp.
Receive the sentence of the law for sins,
Such as by God's book are adjudg'd to death. Shaksp.

In the coffin that had the books, they were found
As fresh as if they had been but newly written;

being written on parchment, and covered over with wax candles of wax. Bacon.

Books are a sort of dumb teachers; they cannot answer sudden questions, or explain present doubts: this is properly the work of a living instructor. Watts.

2. A particular part of a work.

The first book we divide into sections; whereof the first is these chapters past. Burnet's Theory.

3. The register in which a trader keeps an account of his debts.

Such gain the cap of him that makes them fine,
Yet keeps his book uncerof'sd. Shaksp.

4. In books. In kind remembrance.

I was so much in his books, that, at his decease, he left me the lamp by which he used to write his lucubrations. Adelphon.

5. Without book. By memory; by repetition; without reading.

Sermons read they abhor in the church; but sermons without book, sermons which spend their life in their birth, and may have publick audience but once. Hesker.

To BOOK. v. a. [from the noun.] To register in a book.

I beseech your grace, let it be book'd with the rest of this day's deeds; or I will have it in a particular ballad else, with mine own picture on the top of it. Shaksp.

He made wilful murder high treason; he caused the marchers to book their men, for whom they should make answer. Darvies on Ireland.

BOOK-KEEPING. n. f. [from book and keep.] The art of keeping accounts, or recording pecuniary transactions, in such a manner, that at any time a man may thereby know the true state of the whole, or any part of his affairs, with clearness and expedition. Harris.

To the prince and his bookmates. Shaksp.

BO'OKSELLER. n. f. [from book and sell.] He whose profession it is to sell books.

He went to the bookseller, and told him in anger, he had sold a book in which there was f'lic divinity. Malton.

BO'OKWORM. n. f. [from book and worm.]

1. A worm or mite that eats holes in books, chiefly when damp.

My lion, like a moth or bookworm, feeds upon nothing but paper, and I shall beg of them to diet him with wholesome and substantial food. Garard.

2. A student too closely given to books; a reader without judgment.

Among those venerable galleries and solitary scenes of the university, I wanted but a black gown, and a salary, to be as mere a bookworm as any there. Pope's Letters.

BO'OLY. n. f. [An Irish term.]

All the Tartarians, and the people about the Caspian Sea, which are naturally Scythians, live in hordes; being the very same that the Irish boobies are, driving their cattle with them, and feeding only on their milk and white meat. Spenser.

BOOM. n. f. [from boom, a tree, Dutch.]

1. [In sea language.] A long pole used to spread out the clue of the studding sail; and sometimes the clues of the mainfail and forefail are boomed out.

2. A pole with bushes or baskets, set up as a mark to show the sailors how to steer in the channel, when a country is overflown. Sea Dictionary.

3. A bar of wood laid across a harbour, to keep off the enemy.

As his heroick worth struck envy dumb,
Who took the Dutchman and who cut the boom. Dryden.

To-BOOM. v. n. [from the noun. A sea term.]

1. To rush with violence; as a ship is said to come booming, when she makes all the sail she can. Dict.

2. To swell and fall together.
Booming o'er his head
The billows clos'd; he's number'd with the dead. Young.

Forlook by thee, in vain I sought thy aid,
When booming billows clos'd above my head. Pope.

BOON. n. f. [from bene, Sax. a petition.] A gift; a grant; a benefaction; a present.

Vouchsafe me for my meed but one fair look:
A smaller boon than this I cannot beg,
And less than this, I'm sure, you cannot give. Shaksp.

That courtier, who obtained a boon of the emperor, that he might every morning whisper him in the ear, and say nothing, asked no unprofitable suit for himself. Bacon.

The bluffing fool has satisfy'd his will;
His boon is given; his knight has gain'd the day,
But lost the prize. Dryden's Fables.

What rhetoric dost thou use
To gain this mighty boon? the pities me! Addis.
Boon. adj. [bon, Fr.] Gay; merry: as,
a boon companion.

Satiate at length,
And heighten'd as with wine, jocund and boon,
Thus to herself she pleadingly began. Par. Lost.
I know the inhrmity of our family; we play the boon companion, and throw our money away in our cups. Arbuthnot.

BOOR. n. f. [beer, Dutch; gebuene, Sax.] A ploughman; a country fellow; a lout; a clown.

The bare sense of a calamity is called grumbling; and if a man does but make a face upon the boor, he is presently a malecontent.

He may live as well as a boor of Holland, whose cases of growing still richer waste his life.

To one well-born, th' affront is worse and more,
When he's abus'd and ham'd by a boor. Dryden.

Bo'ORISH. adj. [from boor.] Clownish; rustic; untaught; uncivilized.

Therefore, you clown, abandon, which is, in the vulgar, leave the society, which, in the boorish, is company of this female. Shakespeare.

In the purlieu stands a sheep-cote,
West of this place; down in the neighbour bot- tom. Shaksp.

On both the shores of that fruitful bottom, are still to be seen the marks of ancient edifices. Addison on Italy.

Equal convexity could never be seen: the inhabitants of such an earth could have only the prospect of a little circular plain, which would appear to have an acclivity on all sides; so that every man would fancy himself the lowest, and that he always dwelt and moved in a bottom. Bentley.

5. The part most remote from the view; the deepest part.

His proposals and arguments should with freedom be examined to the bottom, that if there be any mistake in them, no body may be misled
by his reputation. Lache.

There being prepared a number of flat-bottomed boats, to transport the land-forces, under the wing and protection of the great navy. Bacon.

BOTTOMLESS. adj. [from bottom.] Without a bottom; fathomless.

Wickedness may well be compared to a bottomless pit, into which it is easier to keep one's self from falling, than, being fallen, to give one's self any day from falling infinitely. Sidney.

Is not my sorrow deep, having no bottom?

Then let my passions bottomless with them. Shak.

Him the Almighty Pow'r

Hurl'd headlong flaming from th' ethereal sky

To bottomless perdition. Milton.

BOTTOMRY. n. f. [In navigation and commerce.] The act of borrowing money on a ship's bottom; that is, by engaging the vessel for the repayment of it, so as that, if the ship miscarry, the lender loses the money advanced; but, if it arrives safe at the end of the voyage, he is to repay the money lent, with a certain premium or interest agreed on; and this on pain of forfeiting the ship. Harris.

BOUCHET. n. f. [French.] A sort of pear.

BOUD. n. f. An insect which breeds in malt; called also a weevil. Diß.

To BOUGE. v. n. [bouge, Fr.] To swell out.

BOUGH. n. f. [box, Sax. the gh is mute.] An arm or large shoot of a tree, bigger than a branch, yet not always distinguished from it.

A vine-labourer, finding a bough broken, took a branch of the same bough, and tied it about the place broken. Sidney.

Their lord and patron loud did him proclaim, And at his feet their laurel boughs did throw. Fairy Queen.

From the bough

She gave him of that fair enticing fruit. Milton.

As the dove's flight did guide Aeneas, now

May thine conduct me to the golden bough. Denham.

Under some fav'rite myrtle's shady boughs,

They speak their passions in repeated vows. Roscommon.

See how, on every bough, the birds express,

In their sweet notes, their happiness. Dryden.

'Twas all her joy the ripening fruits to tend,
 And see the boughs with happy burdens bend. Pope.

BOUGHT. The pret. and part. of To buy.

The chief were these who not for empire fought,

But with their blood their country's safety bought. Pope.

To nature none more bound. Shakespeare.
The bishops of Hungary, being wonderfully rich, were bound to keep great numbers of housemen, which they used to bring into the field.
Kneller.

They summoned the governor to deliver it to them, or else they would not leave one stone upon another. To which the governor made no other reply, than that he was not bound to repair it;
but, however, he would, by God's help, keep the ground afterwards. Clarendon.

BOUND. adj. [a word of doubtful etymology.] Defined; intending to come to any place.

His be that care, whom most it doth concern,
Said he; but whither with such hasty flight
Art thou now bound? for well might I discern Great cause, that carries thee so swift and light.
Fairy Queen.

To be bound for a port one desires extremely,
and sail to it with a fair gale, is very pleasant.

bound,
The port so long desir'd at length we found.
Dryden.

BO'UNDARY. n. f. [from bound.] Limit;
bound.

He suffers the confluence and clamours of the people to pass all boundaries of laws, and reverence to his authority. King Charles.
Sensation and reflection are the boundaries of our thoughts; beyond which the mind, whatever efforts it would make, is not able to advance.
Locke.

Great part of our sins consist in the irregularities attending the ordinary pursuits of life; so that our reformation must appear, by pursuing them within the boundaries of duty. Rogers.

BO'UNDEN. The part. pass. of bind. Not now much in use.

Hereafter, in a better world than this,
I shall desire more love and knowledge of you.—
—I rest much bounden to you: fare you well.
Shakespeare.

We also most humbly besought him to accept of us as his true servants, by as just a right as ever men on earth were bounden. Bacon.

To be careful for a provision of all necessities for ourselves, and those who depend on us, is a bounden duty. Rogers.

Art thou damn'd, Hubert. Shakespeare.

Heav'n has of right all victory design'd;
Whence boundless power dwells in a will confin'd.
Dryden.

Man seems as boundless in his desires, as God is in his being; and therefore nothing but God himself can satisfy him. South.

Though we make duration boundless as it is, we cannot extend it beyond all being. God fills eternity, and it is hard to find a reason why any one should doubt that he fills immensity. Locke.

Some guide the course of wand'ring orbs on high,
Or roll the planets through the boundless sky.
Pope.

BO'UNDLESSNESS. n. f. [from boundless.]

If it is so, bragless let it be,
Great Hector was as good a man as he. Shaksp.

BRA'GLY. adv. [from brag.] Finely; so as it may be bragged.

Seest not thine hawk-thorn stud,
How bragly it begins to lard,
And utter his tender head?
Flora now calleth forth each flower,
And bids him make ready Main's bower. Spenser.

To BRAID. v. a. [brædan, Saxon.] To weave together.

Close the serpent fly,
Insinuating, wove with gaudian twine
His braided train, and of his fatal guile Gave proof unheeded. Milton.

Other wands, lying loosely, may each of them be easily dislocated from the rest; but, when braided into a basket, they cohere strongly. Deyle.

A ribband did the braided tresses bind,
The rest was loose, and wanton'd in the wind.
Dryden.

Since in braided gold her foot is bound,
And a long trailing manteau sweeps the ground,
Her shoe disdains the street.
Gay.

BRAID. n. f. [from the verb.] A texture;
a knot, or complication of something woven together.

Litten where thou art sitting,
Under the glossy, cool, translucent wave,
In twisted braids of lilacs knitting
The loose train of thy amber-dropping hair.
Milton.

No longer shall thy comely tresses break
In flowing ringlets on thy snowy neck,
Or sit behind thy head, an ample round,
In graceful braid, with various ribbon bound.
Prior.

BRAID. adj. [To brede, in Chaucer, is to deceive.] An old word, which seems to signify deceitful.

Since Frenchmen are so braided,
Marry 'em that will. I'll live and die a maid.
Shakespeare.

BRAILS. n. f. [sea term.] Small ropes reeved through blocks, which are seized on either side the ties, a little off upon the yard; so that they come down before the sails of a ship, and are fastened at the skirt of the sail to the crengles.
Their use is, when the sail is furled across, to haul up its bunt, that it may the more readily be taken up or let fall.
Harris.

BRAIN. n. f. [brægen, Sax. breyne, Dutch.]

1. That collection of vessels and organs in the head, from which sense and motion arise.

The brain is divided into cerebrum and cerebel-lum. Cerebrum is that part of the brain which possesses all the upper and forepart of the cranium, being separated from the cerebellum by the second process of the dura mater, under which the cerebellum is situated. The substance of the brain is distinguished into outer and inner; the former is called corticalis, cinnerea, or glandulosa; the latter, medullaris, alba, or nervosa.
Chester.

If I be served such another trick, I'll have my brains taken out, and buttered, and give them to a dog for a new year's gift.
Shakespeare.

That man proportionably hath the largest brain,
I did, I confess, somewhat doubt, and conceived it might have failed in birds, especially such as having little bodies, have yet large cranies, and seem to contain much brain, as snipes and wood-cocks; but, upon trial, I find it very true.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. That part in which the understanding is placed; therefore taken for the understanding.

The force they are under is a real force, and that of their fate but an imaginary conceived one; the one but in their brains, the other on their shoulders.
Hammond.

A man is first a geometrician in his brain, before he be such in his hand.
Hate.

3. Sometimes the affections: this is not common, nor proper.

My son Edgar! had he a hand to write this, a heart and brain to breed it in?
Shakespeare.

TO BRAIN. v. a. [from the noun.] To dash out the brains; to kill by beating out the brains.

Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him
i' th' afternoon to sleep; there thou may'st brain him.
Shakespeare.

Outlaws of nature,
Fit to be shot and brain'd, without a process,

To stop infection; that's their proper death.
Devin.

Next seiz'd two wretches more, and headlong
call,

Brain'd on the rock, his second due repast. Pope.
BRAINISH. adj. [from brain.] Hotheaded;
furious; as cerebrosus in Latin.

In his lawless fits,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
He whips his rapier out, and cries, a rat!
And in his brainish apprehension, kills
The unseen good old man.
Shakespeare.

BRAINLESS. adj. [from brain.] Silly;
thoughtless; witless.

Some brainless men have, by great travel and labour, brought to pass, that the church is now ashamed of nothing more than of faults. Hosker.
If the dull brainless Ajax come late off,
We'll dress him up in vines.
Shakespeare.

The brainless stripling, who expell'd the town,
Damn'd the stiff college and pedantic gown,
Aw'd by thy name, is dumb.
Ticket.

BRAINPAN. n. f. [from brain and pan.]
The skull containing the brains.

With those huge bellows in his hands, he blows
New fire into my head; my brainpan glows.
Dryden.

BRAINICK. adj. [from brain and sick.]
Diseased in the understanding; addle-headed; giddy; thoughtless.

Nor once deject the courage of our minds,
Because Callandra's mad; her brainick raptures Cannot disturb the goodness of a quarrel. Shaksp.
They were brainick men, who could neither endure the government of their king, nor yet thankfully receive the authors of their deliverance.
Kneller.

BRAINICKLY. adv. [from brainick.]
Weakly; headily.

Why, worthy Thane,
You do unbend your noble strength to think
So brainickly of things.
Shakespeare.

choleric speech.
Kneller.

BRAKE. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. A thicket of brambles, or of thorns.

A dog of this town used daily to fetch meat, and to carry the same unto a blind mastiff, that lay in a brake without the town.
Carew.

If I'm traduc'd by tongues, which neither know

My faculties nor person; let me say,
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through.
Shakespeare.

In every bush and brake, where hap may find
The serpent sleeping.
Milton.

Full little thought of him the gentle knight,
Who, flying death, had there conceal'd his flight;
In brakes and brambles hid, and shunning mortal sight.
Dryden's Fables.

2. It is said originally to mean fern.

fined during that operation.

BRA'KY. adj. [from brake.] Thorny;
prickly; rough.

Redeem arts from their rough and braky fests,
where they be hid and overgrown with thorns, in a pure open light, where they may take the eye, and may be taken by the hand. Ben Jonson.

BRA'MBLE. n. f. [bræmblar, Sax. rubus,
Lat.]

1. The blackberry bush; the raspberry bush, or hindberry. Müller.

Content with food which nature freely gives,
On withings and on straw berries they fed:
Cornels and bramble berries gave the rest,
And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast. Dryden.

2. It is taken, in popular language, for any rough prickly shrub.

The bush my bed, the bramble was my bow'r,
The woods can witness many a woful store.
Spenser.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, foolscap, deifying the name of Rosalind. Shakespeare.

Thy younglings, Cuddy, are but just awake,
No shrillies thrill the bramble bush forsake. Gay.

BRA'MBLING. n. f. A bird, called also a mountain chaffinch. DiD.

BRAN. n. f. [branna, Ital.] The husks of corn ground; the refuse of the sieve.

From me do back receive the flow'r of all,
And leave me but the bran. Shakespeare.

The citizens were driven to great distress for want of victuals; bread they made of the coarsest bran, moulded in cloaths; for otherwise it would not cleave together. Hayward.

In the sitting of fourteen years of power and favour, all that came out could not be pure meal, but must have among it a certain mixture of padar and bran, in this lower age of human fragility. Holten.

Then water him, and drinking what he can,
Encourage him to thirst again with bran. Dryden.

BRANCH. n. f. [branche, French.]

1. The shoot of a tree from one of the main boughs.

Why grow the brantles, when the root is gone?
Why wither not the leaves that want their sap?
Shakespeare.

2. Any member or part of the whole; any distinct article; any section or subdivision.

Your oaths are past, and now subscribe your names,

That his own hand may strike his honour down,
That violates the smallest branch herein. Shaksp.

The helix of this was of special importance, to confirm our hopes of another life, on which so many branches of christian piety do immediately depend. Humana.

In the several branches of justice and charity, comprehended in those general rules, of loving our neighbour as ourselves, and of doing to others as we would have them do to us, there is nothing but what is most fit and reasonable. Tillotson.

This precept will oblige us to perform our duty, according to the nature of the various branches of
it. Rogers.

3. Any part that shoots out from the rest.

And six branches shall come out of the sides of it; three branches of the candlestick out of the Farrier's Dict.

9. [In architecture.] The arches of Gothic vaults; which arches transverfing from one angle to another, diagonal wife, form a cross between the other arches, which make the sides of the square, of which the arches are diagonals.

Harris.

To BRANCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To spread in branches.

They were trained together in their childhoods,
and there rooted betwixt them such an affection, which cannot choofe but branch now. Shakspeare.

The cause of scattering the boughs, is the hasty breaking forth of the sap; and therefore those trees rise not in a body of any height, but branch near the ground. The cause of the pyramis, is the keeping in of the sap, long before it branch, and the spending of it, when it beginneth to branch, by equal degrees. Bacon.

Plant it round with shade

Of laurel, evergreen, and branching plain. Milt.

Straight as a line in beauteous order stood

Of oaks unshorn a venerable wood;

Fish was the grafs beneath, and every tree

At distance planted, in a due degree,

Their branching arms in air, with equal space,

Stretch'd to their neighbours with a long embrace. Dryden.

One fees her thighs transform'd, another views

Her arms shot out, and branching into boughs. Addison.

Hath often still'd my brawling discontent. Shakspeare.

How now? Sir John! what, are you brawling here?

Does this become your place, your time, your business? Shakspeare's Henry iv.

Their batt'ring cannon charged to the mouths,
Till their soul-scaring clamours have braw'd
down

The stony ribs of this contemptuous city. Shakspeare.

In council she gives licence to her tongue,
Loquacious, brawling, even in the wrong. Dryden.

Leave all noisy contest, all immodest clamours, brawling language, and especially all personal scandal and scurrility, to the meanest part of the vulgar world. Watts.

2. To speak loud and indecently.

His divisions, as the times do brawl,
Are in three heads; one pow'r against the French,
And one against Glendower. Shakspeare.

3. To make a noise. This is little used.

As he lay along
Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out Upon the brook that brawls along this wood. Shakspeare.

BRAWL. n. f. [from the verb.] Quarrel;
noise; scurrility.

He findeth, that controversies thereby are made but brawls; and therefore wisheth, that, in some lawful assembly of churches, all these strifes may be decided. Hooker.

Never since that middle summer's spring
Met we on bill, in dale, forest, or mead,
But with thy brawls thou hast disturb'd our sport. Shakspeare.

wisdom and truth issue out by the agitation of argument. Howell.

Fully ripe, his swelling fate breaks out,
And hurries him to mighty mischiefs on. Dryden.
All turn'd their sides, and to each other spoke;
I saw their words break out in fire and smoke. Dryden.

Like a ball of fire, the further thrown,
Still with a greater blaze she shone,
And her bright soul broke out on ev'ry side. Milton.

There can be no greater labour, than to be always dissembling; there being so many ways by which a smothered truth is apt to blaze, and break out. South.

There are men of concealed fire, that doth not break out in the ordinary circumstances of life. Addison.

A violent fever broke out in the place, which swept away great multitudes. Addison.

20. To break out. To have eruptions from the body, as pustules or sores.

He broke not out into his great excesses, while he was restrained by the councils and authority of Seneca. Dryden.

21. To break up. To cease; to intermit.

It is credibly affirmed, that, upon that very day when the river first rieth, great plagues in Cairo use suddenly to break up. Bacon.

22. To break up. To dissolve itself.

These, and the like conceits, when men have cleared their understanding by the light of experience, will scatter and break up like mist. Bacon.

The speedy depredation of air upon watery moisture, and vesition of the same into air, ap-peareth in nothing more visible than the sudden discharge or vanishing of a little cloud of breath, or vapour, from glass, or any polish'd body; for the mistiness scattereth, and breaketh up suddenly. Bacon.

But, ere he came near it, the pillar and cross of light break up, and call itself abroad, as it were,
into a firmament of many stars. Bacon.

What we obtain by conversation, is oftentimes lost again, as soon as the company breaks up, or,
at least, when the day vanishes. Harris.

23. To break up. To begin holidays; to be dismissed from business.

Our army is dispers'd already:
Like youthful steers unyok'd, they took their course
East, west, north, south; or, like a school broken up,
Each hurries tow'rd his home and sporting place. Shakespeare.

24. To break with. To part friendship with any.

There is a slave, whom we have put in prison,
Reports, the Volsicians, with two federal powers,
Are enter'd in the Roman territories.—
Go see this rumourer whipt. It cannot be.

The Volsians dare break with us. Shakespeare.
Can there be any thing of friendship in wars,
hooks, and traps? Whatsoever breaks with his friend upon such terms, has enough to warrant
him in so doing, both before God and man. South.

Inven' some apt pretence
To break with Beitram. Dryden.

25. To break with. To part friendship with any.

There is a slave, whom we have put in prison,
Reports, the Volsicians, with two federal powers,
Are enter'd in the Roman territories.—
Go see this rumourer whipt. It cannot be.

The Volsians dare break with us. Shakespeare.
Can there be any thing of friendship in wars,
hooks, and traps? Whatsoever breaks with his friend upon such terms, has enough to warrant
him in so doing, both before God and man. South.
Inven' some apt pretence
To break with Beitram. Dryden.

26. It is to be observed of this extensive and perplexed verb, that in all its signi- fications, whether active or neutral, it has some reference to its primitive mean- ing, by implying either detriment, sud- denness, violence, or separation. It is used often with additional particles, up, out, in, off, forth, to modify its signi- fication.

BREAK. n. f. [from the verb.]

Whither are they vanish'd?
Into the air: and what seem'd corporal
Melted, as breath into the wind. Shakespeare.

2. Life.

No man has more contempt than I of breath?
But whence hast thou the pow'r to give me death? Dryden.

3. The state or power of breathing freely; opposed to the condition in which a man is breathless and spent.

At other times, he casts to sue the chase
Of swift wild beasts, or run on foot a race,
T' enlarge his breath, large breath in arms most needful,
Or else, by wrestling, to wax strong and heedful. Spenser.

What is your difference? speak.—
—I am scarce in breath, my lord. Shakespeare.

Spaniard, take breath; some respite I'll afford;
My cause is more advantage than your sword. Dryden.

Our swords so wholly did the fates employ,
That they, at length, grew weary to destroy;
Refus'd the work we brought, and, out of breath,
Made sorrow and despair attend our death. Dryd.

4. Respite; pause; relaxation.

Give me some breath, some little pause, dear lord,
Before I positively speak. Shakespeare.

5. Breeze; moving air.

Vent all thy passion, and I'll stand its shock
Calm and unshuffled as a summer's sea,
When not a breath of wind flies o'er its surface. Addison's Cato.

6. A single act; an instant.

You menace me, and court me, in a breath;
Your Cupid looks as dreadfully as death. Dryd.

the Scots, that he suffered them not to breathe, or gather themselves together again. Spenser.

Three times they breath'd, and three times did they drink,
Upon agreement. Shakespeare's Henry iv.

Rest, that gives all men life, gave him his death,
And too much breathing put him out of breath. Milton.

BRE

When France had breath'd after intestine broils,
And peace and conquest crown'd her foreign toils.

Reformation.

4. To pass as air.

Shall I not then be stifled in the vault,
To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes
in,
And there be strangled ere my Romeo comes?

Shakespeare.

TO BREATHE. v. a.

1. To inspire or inhale into one's own body, and eject or expire out of it.

They with to live,
To view the light of heav'n, and breathe the vital air.

Dryden.

They here began to breathe a most delicious kind of ether, and saw all the fields about them covered with a kind of purple light.

Tatler.

2. To inject by breathing: with into.

He breathed into us the breath of life, a vital active spirit; whose motions, he expects, should own the dignity of its original. Decay of Piety.

fertile. Shakspere.

To BRING. v. a. [byungan, Sax. pret.
I brought; part. pass. brought; byoht,
Saxon.]

1. To fetch from another place: distinguished from to carry, or convey, to another place.

I was the chief that rais'd him to the crown,
And I'll be chief to bring him down again. Shakspere.

And as she was going to fetch it, he called to her, and said, bring me, I pray thee, a morsel of bread in thy hand. Kings.

A registry of lands may furnish easy securities of money, that shall be brought over by strangers. Temple.

2. To convey in one's own hand; not to send by another.

And if my wish'd alliance please your king,
Tell him he should not send the peace, but bring. Dryden.

3. To produce; to procure, as a cause.

There is nothing will bring you more honour, and more ease, than to do what right in justice
you may. Bacon.

4. To reduce; to recal.

Bring back gently their wandering minds, by going before them in the train they should pursue, without any rebuke. Locke.

Nathan's fable had so good an effect, as to bring the man after God's own heart to a right sense of his guilt. Spettator.

5. To attract; to draw along.

In distillation, the water ascends difficultly, and brings over with it some part of the oil of vitriol. Newton's Opticks.

6. To put into any particular state or circumstances; to make liable to any thing.

Having got the way of reasoning, which that study necessarily brings the mind to, they might be able to transfer it to other parts of knowledge, as they shall have occasion. Locke.

The question for bringing the king to justice was immediately put, and carried without any opposition, that I can find. Swift.

7. To lead by degrees.

A due consideration of the vanities of the world, will naturally bring us to the contempt of it; and the contempt of the world will as certainly bring us home to ourselves. L'Estrange.

The understanding should be brought to the difficult and knotty parts of knowledge by insensible degrees. Locke.

8. To recal; to summons.

But those, and more than I to mind can bring,
Menelaus has not yet forgot to sing. Dryden.

9. To induce; to prevail upon.

The nature of the things, contained in those words, would not suffer him to think otherwise, how, or whensoever, he is brought to reflect on them. Locke.

It seems so preposterous a thing to men, to make themselves unhappy in order to happiness, that they do not easily bring themselves to it. Locke.

Profitable employments would no less a diversion than any of the idle sports in fashion, if men could be brought to delight in them. Locke.

10. To bring about. [See ABOUT.] To bring to pass; to effect.

This he conceives not hard to bring about,
If all of you would join to help him out. Dryden.

Thus turn of mind threw off the oppositions of envy and competition; it enabled him to gain the most vain and impracticable into his designs, and to bring about several great events, for the advantage of the publick. Addison's Freuchades.

11. To bring forth. To give birth to; to produce.

The good queen,
For she's good, hath brought you forth a daughter:
Here 'tis; commend it to your blessing. Shaksp.

More wonderful
Than that which, by creation, first brought forth Light out of darkness! Paradise Lost.

Bewail thy falsehood, and the pious works
It hath brought forth, to make thee memorable
Among illustrious women, faithful wives. Milton's Aganistes.

Bellona leads thee to thy lover's hand;
Another queen brings forth another brand,
To burn with foreign fires her native land! Dryd.

Idleness and luxury bring forth poverty and want; and this tempts men to injustice, and that causeth enmity and animosity. Tillotson.

The value of land is raised, when it is fitted to bring forth a greater quantity of any valuable product. Locke.

12. To bring forth. To bring to light.

The thing that is hid bringeth he forth to light. Job.

13. To bring in. To place in any condition.

He protests he loves you,
And needs no other suitor, but his liking,
To bring you in again. Shakspere's Othello.

14. To bring in. To reduce.

Send over into that realm such a strong power of men, as should perforce bring in all that rebellious rout, and loose people. Spenser on Ireland.

15. To bring in. To afford gain.

The sole measure of all his courtesies is, what return they will make him, and what revenue they will bring him in. Scarth.

Trade brought us in plenty and riches. Locke.

16. To bring in. To introduce.

Entertain no long discourse with any; but, if you can, bring in something to season it with religion. Taylor.

There is but one God who made heaven and earth, and sea and winds; but the folly and madness of mankind brought in the images of gods. Sevincfleet.

The fruitfulness of Italy, and the like, are not brought in by force, but naturally rise out of the argument. Addison.

Since he could not have a seat among them himself, he would bring in one who had more merit. Tatler.

Quotations are best brought in to confirm some opinion controverted. Swift.

17. To bring off. To clear; to procure to be acquitted; to cause to escape.

I trusted to my head, that has betrayed me;
and I found fault with my legs, that would otherwise have brought me off. L'Estrange.

Set a kite upon the bench, and it is forty to one he'll bring off a crow at the bar. L'Estrange.

The best way to avoid this imputation, and to bring off the credit of our understanding, is to be truly religious. Tillotson.

18. To bring on. To engage in action.

If there be any that would reign, and take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on. Bacon.

19. To bring on. To produce as an occasional cause.

The fountains of the great deep being broke open, so as a general deludation and devastation was brought upon the earth, and all things in it. Burns's Theory.

The great question, which in all ages has disturbed mankind, and brought on them those miseries. Locke.

20. To bring over. To convert; to draw to a new party.

This liberty should be made use of upon few occasions of small importance, and only with a view of bringing over his own side, another time, something of greater and more public moment. Swift.

The protestant clergy will find it, perhaps, no difficult matter to bring great numbers over to the church. Swift.

21. To bring out. To exhibit; to show.

If I make not this cheat bring out another, and the theaters prove sheep, let me be unlook'd.

Which he could bring out, where he had, And what he bought them for, and paid. Hudib.

These shake his soul, and, as they boldly press, Bring out his crimes, and force him to confess. Dryden.

Another way made use of, to find the weight of the denari, was by the weight of Greek coins; but those experiments bring out the denarius heavier. Arbutnot.

22. To bring under. To subdue; to repress.

That sharp course which you have set down, for the bringing under of these rebels of Ulster, and preparing a way for their perpetual reformation. Spenser.

To say, that the more capable, or the better deserver, hath such right to govern, as he may compulsorily bring under the less worthy, is idle. Bacon.

23. To bring up. To educate; to instruct; to form.

The well bringing up of the people, serves as a most sure bond to hold them. Sidney.

He that takes upon him the charge of bringing up young men, especially young gentlemen, should have something more in him than Latin. Locke.

They frequently conversed with this lovely virgin, who had been brought up by her father in knowledge. Andison's Guardian.

24. To bring up. To introduce to general practice.

Several obliging deferences, condescensions, and submissions, with many outward forms and ceremonies, were first of all brought up among the politer part of mankind, who lived in courts and cities. Spenser.

25. To bring up. To cause to advance.

Bring up your army; but I think you'll find, They've not prep'rd for us. Shakespeare.

26. Bring retains, in all its senses, the idea of an agent, or cause, producing a real or metaphorical motion of something toward something; for it is oft said, that he brought his companion out. The meaning is, that he was brought to something that was like wife without.

BRINGER. n. f. [from bring.] The person that brings any thing.

Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news Hath but a long office; and his tongue Sound never alters a fullen bell, But murther's tolling a dead friend. Shakespeare.

Best you see safe the bringer
Out of the host: I must attend mine office. Shakespeare.

BRINGER UP. Instructor; educator.

Italy and Rome have been breeders and bringers up of the worthiest men. Johnson.

BRINISH. adj. [from brine.] Having the taste of brine; salt.

Nero would be tainted with remorse
To hear and see her plaints, her bringish tears. Shakespeare.

For now I stand, as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of fear,
Who marks the warring tide grow wave by wave;
Expelling ever when some envious surge
Will, in his bringish bowels, swallow him. Shaks.

BRINISHNESS. n. f. [from brinisk.] Saltiness; tendency to saltiness.

BRINK. n. f. [brink, Danish.] The edge of any place, as of a precipice or a river.

Th' amazed flames stand gather'd in a heap,
And from the precipice's brink retire,
Afraid to venture on so large a leap. Dryden.

We stand therefore on the brink and confines
Of those states at the day of doom. Atterbury.

So have I seen, from Severn's brink,
A flock of geese jump down together;
Swim where the bird of Jove would sink,
And, swimming, never wet a feather. Swift.

BRINY. adj. [from brine.] Salt.

He, who first the passage try'd,
In harden'd oak his heart did hide;
Or lay, at least, in hollow wood,
Who tempted first the briny flood. Dryden.

Then, briny seas, and rapturous springs, farewell!
Where fountain nymphs, confus'd with Nereids, dwell. Addison.

A muttick or briny taste seems to be produced by a mixture of an acid and alkaline salt; for spirit of salt, and salt of tartar, mixed, produce a salt like sea salt. Arbutnot.

BR'ONY. See BRYONY.

BRISK. adj. [brusque, French.]

1. Lively; vivacious; gay; sprightly: applied to men.

Pythee, die, and set me free,
Or else lie,
Kind and brisk and gay like me. Denham.

A creeping young fellow, that had committed matrimony with a brisk gamester's lady, was so altered in a few days, that he was like a skeleton than a living man.

Why should all honour then be taken
From lower parts to load the brain;
When other limbs we plainly see,
Each in his way, as brisk as he? Prior.

2. Powerful; spirituous.

Our nature here is not unlike our wine:
Some form, when old, continue brisk and fine. Denham.

Under ground, the rude Riphæan race
Mimick brisk cyder, with the brake's product wild, Sloes pounded, hips, and servus' hardest juice. Phillips.

It must needs be some exterior cause, and the brisk acting of some objects without me, whose efficacy I cannot resist. Locke.

3. Vivid; bright. Not used.

Objects appeared much darker, because my instrument was overcharged; had it magnified thirty or twenty-five times, it had made the object appear more brisk and pleasant. Newton.

TO BRISK UP. v. n. To come up briskly.

BRISKET. n. f. [brisset, Fr.] The breast of an animal.

See that none of the wool be wanting, that the rums be red, teeth white and even, and the brisket flannelled. Mortimer.

BRISKLY. adv. [from brisk.] Actively; vigorously.

We have seen the air in the bladder suddenly expand itself so much, and so briskly, that it manifestly lifted up some light bodies that leaned upon it. Boyle.

I could plainly perceive the creature to suck in many of the most minute animalcula, that were swimming briskly about in the water. Ray.

BRISKNESS. n. f. [from brisk.]

1. Liveliness; vigour; quickness.

Some remains of corruption, though they do not conquer and extinguish, yet will slacken and abate, the vigour and briskness of the renewed principle. South.

2. Gayety.

But the most distinguishing part of his character seems to me to be his briskness, his jollity, and his good humour. Dryden.

BRISTLE. n. f. [bristl, Sax.] The stiff hair of swine.

I will not open my lips so wide as a bristle may enter. Shakespeare.

He is covered with hair, and not, as the boar, with bristles, which probably spend more upon the same matter, which, in other creatures, makes the horns; for bristles seem to be nothing else but a horn split into a multitude of little ones. Grew.

Two boars whom love to battle draws,
With rising bristles, and with frothy jaws,
Their adverse breasts with tusks oblique they wound. Dryden.

TO BRISTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To erect in bristle.

Now for the bare pickt bone of majesty,
Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest,
And snarleth in the gentle eyes of peace. Shaks.

Which makes him plume himself, and bristle up
The crest of youth against your dignity. Shaks.

TO BRISTLE. v. n. To stand erect as bristles.

Be it ounce, or cat, or bear,
Pard, or boar with bristled hair,
In thy eye that shall appear,
When thou wak'st, it is thy dear. Shakespeare.

Stood Theodore surpriz'd in deadly fright,
With chattering teeth, and bristling hair upright;
Yet arm'd with inborn worth. Dryden.

Thy hair so bristles with unmanly fears,
As fields of corn that rise in bearded ears. Dryd.

TO BRISTLE A THREAD. To fix a bristle to it.

BRISTLY. adj. [from bristle.] Thick set with bristles.

The leaves of the black mulberry are somewhat bristly, which may help to preserve the dew. Bacon.

If the eye were so acute as to rival the finest microscope, the sight of our own selves would affright us; the smoothest skin would be beset with rugged scales and bristly hairs. Bentley.

Thus manifold beech the bristly chestnut bears,
And the wild ash is white with bloomy pears. Dryden.

The careful master of the swine,
Forth hasteth he to tend his bristled care. Pope.

TO BRIGHT. } hops, are said to brite,

when they grow over-ripe.

BRITTLE. adj. [brretan, Sax.] Fragile; apt to break; not tough.

The wood of vines is very durable; though as tree hath the twigs, while they are green, so brittle yet the wood dried is extremely tough. Bacon.

From earth all came, to earth must all return, Fragile as the cord, and brittle as the urn. Prior.

Of airy pomp, and fleeting joys,
What does the busy world conclude at best,
But brittle goods, that break like glass? Grave.
If the stone is brittle, it will often crumble, and pass in the form of gravel. Arbutnot.

BRITTLENESS. n. f. [from brittle.] Apt-ness to break; fragility.

A wit quick without brightness, sharp without brittleness. Alchem's Schoolmaster.

Artificers, in the tempering of steel, by holding it but a minute or two longer or lesser in the flame, give it very differing tempers, as to brittleness or toughness. Boyle.

BRIZE. n. f. The gadfly.

A brize, a scorned little creature,
Through his fair hide his angry sting did threaten. Spenser.

BROACH. n. f. [broche, French.]

1. A spit.

He was taken into service to a bafe office in his kitchen; so that he turned a broach, that had worn a crown. Bacon.

Whose offered entrails shall his crime reproach,
And dip their fatness from the hazle broach. Dryden.

2. A musical instrument, the sounds of which are made by turning round a handle. DiD.

3. [With hunters.] A start of the head of a young stag, growing sharp like the end of a spit. DiD.

To BROACH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To spit; to pierce as with a spit.

Were now the general of our gracious emperors,
As in good time he may, from Ireland coming,
Bringing rebellion broached on his sword. Shakspeare.

He felled men as one would mow hay, and sometimes broached a great number of them upon his pike, as one would carry little birds spitted upon a stick. Hakewill.

2. To pierce a vessel in order to draw the liquor; to tap.

3. To open any store.

I will notably provide, that you shall want neither weapons, victuals, nor aid: I will open the old armouries, I will broach my store, and bring forth my stores. Knotter.

4. To let out any thing.

And now the field of death, the lists,
Were enter'd by antagonists,
And blood was ready to be broach'd,
When Hudibras in haste approach'd. Hudibras.

5. To give out, or utter any thing.

This error, that Pison was Ganges, was first broach'd by Josephus. Raleigh.

Those who were the chief instruments of raising the noise, made use of these very opinions themselves had broach'd, for arguments to prove, that the change of ministers was dangerous. Swift's Examiner.

BRO'ACHER. n. f. [from broach.]

1. A spit.

The youth approach'd the fire, and, as it burn'd,

On five sharp broachers tank'd, the roast they turn'd; Dryden.

These morsels stay'd their stomachs.

2. An opener, or utterer of any thing;
the first author.

There is much pride and vanity in the affectation of being the first broacher of an heretical opinion. L'Estrange.

Numerous parties denominate themselves, not from the grand Author and Finisher of our faith, but from the first broacher of their idolized opinions. Deany of Pity.

This opinion is commonly, but falsely, aftributed to Aristotle, not as its first broacher, but as its ablest patron. Chryse.

BROAD. adj. [broad, Saxon.]

1. Wide; extended in breadth, distinguished from length; not narrow.

The weeds that his broad spreading leaves did shelter

Are pull'd up, root and all. Shakspeare.

The top may be justly said to grow broader,
as the bottom narrower. Temple.

Of all your knowledge this vain fruit you have,
To walk with eyes broad open to your grave. Dryden.

So lofty was the pile, a Parthian bow,
With vigour drawn, must send the shaft below;

The bottom was full twenty fathom broad. Dryd.

He launch'd the fiery bolt from pole to pole,
Broad burst the lightnings, deep the thunders roll. Bye.

2. Large.

To keep him at a distance from falsehood, and cunning, which has always a broad mixture of falseness; this is the finest preparation of a child for wisdom. Locke.

3. Clear; open; not sheltered; not affording concealment.

In mean time he, with cunning to conceal
All thought of this from others, himself bore
In broad house, with the woovers, us before. Chapman.

It no longer seeks the shelter of night and darkness, but appears in the broadest light. Deany of Pity.

If children were left alone in the dark, they would be no more afraid than in broad sunshine. Locke.

4. Gross; coarse.

The reeve and the miller are distinguished from each other, as much as the lady purports and the broad-speaking, gap toothed wife of Bath. Dryd.

Love made him doubt his broad barbarian sound;

By love, his want of words and wit he found. Dryden.

If open vice be what you drive at,
A name so broad will ne'er connive at. Dryden.

The broadest mirth unfeeling folly wears,
Less pleasing far than virtue's very tears. Pope.

Room for my lord! three jockeys in his train;
Six huntmen with a shout precede his chair;
He grins, and looks broad nonsense with a stare. Pope.

5. Obscene; fulsome; tending to obsecnity.

As chaste and modest as he is esteemed, it cannot be denied, but in some places he is broad and fulsome. Dryden.

Though now arraign'd, he read with some delight;

Because he seems to chew the cud again,
When his broad comment makes the text too plain. Dryden.

6. Bold; not delicate; not reserved.

Who can speak bolder than he that has no house to put his head in? Such may rail against great buildings. Shakspeare.

From broad words, and 'cause he fail'd
His presence at the tyrant's feast, I hear, Maeduff lives in disgrace. Shakspeare.

BROAD as long. Equal upon the whole.

The mobile are still for levelling; that is to say, for advancing themselves: for it is as broad as long, whether they rise to others, or bring others down to them. L'Estrange.

BROAD-CLOTH. n. f. [from broad and cloth.] A fine kind of cloth.

Thus, a wife tailor is not pinching,
But turns at ev'ry seam an inch in:
Or else, be sure, your broad-cloth breeches
Will ne'er be smooth, nor hold their stitches. Swift.

BROAD-EYED. adj. [from broad and eye.]
Having a wide survey.

In despite of broad-eyed watchful day,
I would into thy bosom pour my thoughts:
But, ah! I will not. Shakspeare.

to palliate the broadness of the meaning. Dryden.

BRO'ADSHOULDERED. adj. [from broad and shoulder.] Having a large space between the shoulders.

Big-boned, and large of limbs, with sinews strong;

Broadshoulder'd, and his arms were round and long. Dryden.

I am a tall, broadshoulder'd, impudent, black fellow; and, as I thought, every way qualified for such widow. Spectator.

BRO'ADSIDE. n. f. [from broad and side.]

1. The side of a ship, distinct from the head or stern.

From valier hopes than this he seem'd to fall,
That durst attempt the British admiral:
From her broadside a rider flame is thrown,
Than from the fiery chariot of the sun. Waller.

2. The volley of shot fired at once from the side of a ship.

3. [In printing.] A sheet of paper con-

BRO'ADSWORD. n. f. [from broad and Yet sure his honesty,

Got him small gains, but shameless flattery,
And filthy brocage, and unseemly shifts,
And borrow bate, and some good ladies gifts. Spenser.

2. The hire given for any unlawful office.

As for the politick and wholesome laws, they were interpreted to be but brocage of an usurer, thereby to woo and win the hearts of the people. Bacon.

3. The trade of dealing in old things; the trade of a broker.

Poor poet ape, that would be thought our chief,
Whose works are e'en the snappery of wits,
From brocage is become to hold a thief,
As we, the rabbi'd, leave rage, and pity it. Ben Jonson.

4. The transaction of business for other men.

So much as the quantity of money is lessened, so much must the share of every one that has a right to this money be the less; whether he be landholder, for his goods; or labourer, for his hire; or merchant, for his broage. Locke.
BRUCOLI. n. f. [Italian.] A species of cabbage.

Content with little, I can piddle here
 On brocoli and mutton round the year;
 But ancient friends, tho' poor or out of play,
 That touch my bell, I cannot turn away. Pope.

Some on the fire the reeking entrails broil. Dryd.

To BROIL. v. n. To be in the heat.

Where have you been broiling?
 —Among the crowd i' th' abbey, where a finger

Could not be wedg'd in more. Shakespeare.

Long ere now all the planets and comets had been broiling in the sun, had the world lasted from all eternity. Chryme.

To BROKE. v. n. [Of uncertain etymology. Skinner seems inclined to derive it from To break, because broken men turn factors or brokers. Casaubon, from apartum. Skinner thinks, again, that it may be contracted from procurer. Lye more properly deduces it from brucean, Sax. to be busy.] To transact business for others, or by others. It is used generally in reproach.

He does, indeed,
 And breaks with all that can, in such a suit,
 Corrupt the tender honour of a maid. Shaf.

The gains of bargains are of a more doubtful nature, when men should wait upon others necessity; break by servants and instruments to draw them on. Baron.

BROOK. n. f. [bꝛoc, or bꝛoca, Sax.] A running water, less than a river.

A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Shakespeare.

Or many grateful altars I would rear
Of grassy turf; and pile up every stone
Of lustre from the brook; in memory,
Of monument to ages. Milton.

And to Cephissus' brook their way pursue:
The stream was troubled, but the ford they knew. Dryden.

Springs make little rivulets; those united,
make brooks; and those coming together, make rivers, which empty themselves into the sea. Locke.

TO BROOK. v. a. [bꝛucan, Sax.] To bear; to endure; to support.

Even they, which brook it worst that men should tell them of their duties, when they are told the same by a law, think very well and reasonably of it. Hooker.

A thousand more mischances than this one
Have learned me to brook this patiently. Shaksf.

How use doth breed a habit in a man!
This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods,
I better brook than flourishing peopled towns. Shaksf. & ar.

Hear'n, the seat of bliss,
Brook not the works of violence and war. Milton.

Most men can much rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools. South.

Restraint thou wilt not brook; but think it hard,
Your prudence is not trusted as your guard. Dryd.

TO BROOK. v. n. To endure; to be content.

He, in these wars, had flatly refused his aid;

What may this mean? Language of man pronounced

By tongue of brute and human sense express'd? Milton.

To those three present impulses, of sense, memory, and instinct, most, if not all, the sagacities of brutes may be reduced. Hale.

Brutes may be considered as either aerial, terrestrial, aquatic, or amphibious. I call those aerial which have wings, wherewith they can support themselves in the air; terrestrial are those, whose only place of rest is upon the earth; aquatic are those, whose constant abode is upon the water. Locke.

Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of fate, All but the page prefer'd, this present state; From brutes what men, from men what spirits know;

Or who could suffer being here below? Pope.

VOL. I.

BUB

TO BRUTE. v. a. [written ill for bruil.] To report.

This, once bruted through the army, filled them all with heaviness. Knotles.

BRUTENESS. n. f. [from brute.] Brutality. Not used.

Thou dotard vile,
That with thy bruteness shend'st thy comely age. Spenser.

TO BRUTIFY. v. a. [from brute.] To make a man a brute.

O thou fallacious woman! am I then brutified?
Ay; I feel it here; I sprout, I bud, I am ripe horn mad. Congreve.

BRUTISH. adj. [from brute.]

1. Bestial; resembling a beast.

Ofis, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monstrous shapes and forecies abus'd Fanatick Egypt, and her priests, to seek Their wand'ring gods disguis'd in brutish forms. Milton.

2. Having the qualities of a brute; rough; savage; ferocious.

Brutes, and brutish men, are commonly more able to bear pain than others. Grew.

3. Gross; carnal.

For thou thyself hast been a libertine,
As sensual as the brutish sting itself. Shakespeare.
After he has slept himself into some use of himself, by much ado he flatters to his table again, and there acts over the same brutish scene. South.

4. Ignorant; untaught; uncivilized.

They were not so brutish, that they could be ignorant to call upon the name of God. Hooker.

BRUTISHLY. adv. [from brutish.] In the manner of a brute; savagely; irrationally; grossly.

I am not so diffident of myself, as brutishly to submit to any man's dictates. King Charles.
For a man to found a confident practice upon a disputable principle, is brutishly to outrun his reason. South.

BRUTISHNESS. n. f. [from brutish.] Brutality; savageness.

All other courage, besides that, is not true valour, but brutishness. Spratt.

BRUYONY. n. f. [bruyonia, Latin.] A plant.

BUB. n. f. [a cant word.] Strong malt liquor.

Or if it be his fate to meet
With folks who have more wealth than wit,
He loves cheap part, and double bub,
And settles in the humdrum club. Prior.

BUBBLE. n. f. [bobbet, Dutch.]

1. A small bladder of water; a film of water filled with wind.

Bubbles are in the form of a hemisphere; air within, and a little skin of water without; and it seemeth somewhat strange, that the air should rise so swiftly, while it is in the water, and when it cometh to the top, should be stayed by so weak a cover as that of the bubble is. Bacon.

The colours of bubbles with which children play, are various, and change their situation variously, without any respect to confine or shadow. Newton.

2. Any thing which wants solidity and firmness; any thing that is more specious than real.

The earl of Lincoln was induced to participate, not lightly upon the strength of the proceedings there, which was but a bubble, but upon letters from the lady Margaret. Bacon.

Then a soldier,
Seeking the bubble reputation,
Even in the cannon's mouth. Shakespeare.
War, he sung, is toil and trouble,
Honour but an empty bubble,
Fighting still, and still destroying. Dryden.

3. A cheat; a false show.

BU

The nation then too late will find,

Directors promises but wind,
South-sea at best a mighty bubble. Swift.

4. The person cheated.

Cease dearest mother, cease to chide;
Gany's a cheat, and I'm a bubble;
Yet why this great excess of trouble? Prior.
He has been my bubble these twenty years, and, to my certain knowledge, understands no more of his own affairs, than a child in swaddling clothes. Dehobert.

TO BU'BLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To rise in bubbles.

Alas! a crimson river of warm blood,
Like to a bubbling fountain stir'd with wind,
Doth rise and fall. Shakespeare.
Adder's fork, and blindworm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owl's wing;
For a charm of pow'ful trouble,
Like a hellbroth boil and bubble. Shakespeare.
Still bubble on, and pour forth blood and tears. Dryden.

The same spring suffers at some times a very manifest remission of its heat; at others, as manifest an increase of it; yea, sometimes to that excess, as to make it boil and bubble with extreme heat. Woodward.

2. To run with a gentle noise.

For thee the bubbling springs appear'd to mourn,
And whispering pines made vows for thy return. Dryden.

Not bubbling fountains to the thirsty swain,
Not show'rs to larks, or sunshine to the bee,
Are half so charming as thy sight to me. Pope.

TO BU'BBLE. v. a. To cheat; a cant word.

He tells me, with great passion, that he has bubbled him out of his youth; and has drilled him on to five and fifty. Addison.

Charles Mather could not bubble a young heau better with a toy. Arbutnot.

BU'BLER. n. f. [from bubble.] A cheat.

What words can suffice to express, how infinitely I esteem you, above all the great ones in this part of the world; above all the Jews, jobbers, and bubblers! Digby to Pope.

BU'BBY. n. f. A woman's breast.

Fuh! say they, to ice a handsome, brisk, genteel, young fellow, so much govern'd by a dotting old woman; why don't you go and suck the bubby? Arbutnot.

BU'BO. n. f. [Lat. from bubō, the groin.]

That part of the groin from the bending of the thigh to the scrotum; and therefore all tumours in that part are called buboes. Quincy.

I suppurated it after the manner of a bubo, opened it, and endeavoured dexterly. W'sman.

BUBONOCLE. n. f. [Lat. from bubō, the groin, and κλῆ, a rupture.] A particular kind of rupture, when the intestines break down into the groin. Quincy.

When the intestine, or omentum, falls through the rings of the abdominal muscles into the groin, it is called hernia inguinalis, or if into the scrotum, scrotalis: these two, though the first only is properly so called, are known by the name of bubonocle. Sharp.

BU'BUKLE. n. f. A red pimple.

His face is all bubukles, and wheels, and knobs, and flames of fire. Shakespeare.

BUCANIERS. n. f. A cant word for the privateers, or pirates of America.

BUCCELLATION. n. f. [buccella, a mouthful, Lat.] In some chymical authors, signifies a dividing into large pieces. Harris.

BUCK. n. f. [hauche, Germ. suls, or lie.]

1. The liquor in which clothes are washed.

Buck! I would I could wash myself of the buck: I warrant you, buck, and of the season too it shall appear. Shakespeare.

2. The clothes washed in the liquor.

BU C

- Of late, not able to travel with her furred pack,
she washes bucks here at home. Shakspeare.
- BUCK. n. f. [buech, Welsh; buck, Dutch; boue, Fr.] The male of the fallow deer; the male of rabbits, and other animals.
Buck, goats, and the like, are said to be tripping or salient, that is, going or leaping. Prædham.
- To BUCK. v. a. [from the noun.] To wash clothes.
Here is a bucket; he may creep in here, and throw foul linen upon him, as if it were going to bucketing. Shakspeare.
- To BUCK. v. n. [from the noun.] To copulate as bucks and does.
The chief time of setting traps, is in their bucketing time. Mortimer.
- BUCKBASKET. n. f. The basket in which clothes are carried to the wash.
They conveyed me into a bucket; rammed me in with foul shirts, foul stockings, and greasy napkins. Shakspeare.
- BUCKBEAN. n. f. [buckboonen, Dutch.] A plant; a sort of trefoil.
The bitter nauseous plants, as centaury, buck-bear, gentian, of which tea may be made, or wines by infusion. Floyer.
- BUCKET. n. f. [baquet, French.]
1. The vessel in which water is drawn out of a well.
Now is this golden crown like a deep well,
That owes two buckets, filling one another;
The emptier ever dancing in the air,
The other down unseen, and full of water. Shak.
Is the sea ever likely to be evaporated by the sun, or to be emptied with buckets? Bentley.
 2. The vessels in which water is carried, particularly to quench a fire.
Now streets grow throng'd, and, busy as by day,
Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire;
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play;
And some, more bold, mount ladders to the fire. Dryden.
The porringers, that in a row
Hung high, and made a glittering show,
To a lets noble substance chang'd,
Were now but leathern buckets rang'd. Swift.
- BUCKLE. n. f. [buccl, Welsh, and the same in the Armorick; boucle, French.]
1. A link of metal, with a tongue or catch, made to fasten one thing to another.
Fair lined slippers for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold. Shakspeare.
The chlamys was a sort of short cloak tied with a buckle, commonly to the right shoulder. Arbuthnot.
Three seal-rings; which after, melted down,
Form'd a vast buckle for his widow's gown. Pope.
 2. The state of the hair crisped and curled, by being kept long in the same state.
The greatest beau was dressed in a flaxen periwig: the wearer of it goes in his own hair at home, and lets his wig lie in buckle for a whole half year. Speclator.
That live-long wig, which Gorgon's self might own, Eternal buckle takes in Perian stone. Pope.
- To BUCKLE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fasten with a buckle.
Like sapphire, pearl, in rich embroidery,
Buckled below fair knight-hood's bending knee. Shakspeare.
France, whose armour conscience buckled on,
Whom zeal and charity brought to the field. Shakspeare.
Thus ever, when I buckle on my helmet,
Thy fears afflict thee. Philips.
When you carry your master's riding coat wrap your own in it, and buckle them up close with a strap. Swift.
 2. To prepare to do any thing; the me-

- taphor is taken from buckling on the armour.
- The Saracen, this bearing, rose again,
And catching up in haste his three square shield,
And shining helmet, soon him buckled to the field. Spenser.
3. To join in battle.
The lord Gray, captain of the men at arms, was forbidden to charge, until the foot of the avantguard were buckled with them in front. Hayward.
 4. To confine.
How brief the life of man
Runs his erring pilgrimage!
That the stretching of a span Buckles in his sum of age. Shakspeare.
- TO BUCKLE. v. n. [bucken, Germ.]
1. To bend; to bow.
The wretch, whose fever-weaken'd joints,
Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life,
Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fic
Out of his keeper's arms. Shakspeare.
 2. To buckle to. To apply to; to attend.
See the advice, 2d sense.
Now a covetous old crafty knave,
At dead of night, shall raise his son, and cry,
Turn out, you rogue! how like a beast you lie!
Go, buckle to the law. Dryden.
This is to be done in children, by trying them, when they are by lamels unbent, or by avocation bent another way, and endeavouring to make them buckle to the thing proposed. Locke.
 3. To buckle with. To engage with; to encounter; to join in a close fight, like men locked or buckled together.
For single combat, thou shalt buckle with me. Shakspeare.
Yet thou, they say, for marriage dost provide;
Is this an age to buckle with a bride? Dryden.
- BUCKLER. n. f. [buccler, Welsh; bouclier, Fr.] A shield; a defensive weapon buckled on the arm.
He took my arms, and while I forc'd my way Through troops of foes, which did our passage
stay;
My buckler o'er my aged father cast,
Still fighting, still defending, as I past. Dryden.
This medal compliments the emperor as the Romans did dictator Fabius, when they called him the buckler of Rome. Addison.
- To BUCKLER. v. a. [from the noun.] To support; to defend.
Fear not, sweet wench, they shall not touch thee, Kate;
I'll buckler thee against a million. Shakspeare.
Can Oxford, that did ever fence the right,
Now buckler falsehood with a pedigree? Shakspeare.
- BUCKLER-THORN. n. f. Christ's thorn.
- BUCKMAST. n. f. The fruit or malt of the beech tree.
- BUCKRAM. n. f. [bougran, Fr.] A sort of strong linen cloth, stiffened with gum, used by tailors and staymakers.
I have peppered two of them; two, I am sure,
I have paid, two rogues in buckram suits. Shak.
- BUCKRAMS. n. f. The same with will garlick.
- BUCKSHORN PLANTAIN. n. f. [coronopus, Lat. from the form of the leaf.] A plant. Miller.
- BUCKTHORN. n. f. [rhamnus, Lat. supposed to be so called from bucc, Sax. the belly] A tree that bears a purging berry.
- BUCKWHEAT. n. f. [buckweitz, Germ. fagopyrum, Lat.] A plant. Miller.
- BUCCOLICK. adj. [bucconia, from bucconis, a cowherd.] Pastoral.

BU F

- BUD. n. f. [bouton, Fr.] The first shoot of a plant; a gem.
Be as thou wast wont to be,
See as thou wast wont to see:
Dian's bud o'er Cupid's flower
Hath such force and blest power. Shakspeare.
Writers say, as the most forward bud
Is eaten by the canker ere it blow,
Even so by love the young and tender wit
Is turn'd to folly, blasting in the bud, Losing his verdure even in the prime. Shakspeare.
When you the flow'rs for Chioe twine,
Why do you to her garland join
The meanest bud that falls from mine? Prior.
Infects wound the tender bud, with a long hollow trunk, and deposit an egg in the hole, with a sharp corroding liquor, that causeth a swelling in the leaf, and closeth the orifice. Bentley.
- To BUD. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To put forth young shoots, or gems.
Bud forth as a rose growing by the brook of the field. Evel.
 2. To rise as a gem from the stalk.
There the fruit, that was to be gathered from such a confus, quickly budded out. Clarendon.
Heav'n gave him all at once, then snatch'd away,
Ere mortals all his beauties could survey:
Just like that flower that buds and withers in a day. Dryden.
Tho' lab'ring yokes on their own necks they fear'd,
And felt for budding horns on their smooth fore-heads rear'd. Dryden's Silienus.
 3. To be in the bloom, or growing.
Young budding virgin, fair and fresh and sweet,
Whither away, or where is thy abode? Shakspeare.
- To BUD. v. a. To inoculate; to graft by inserting a bud into the rind of another tree.
Of apricocks, the largest is much improved by budding upon a peach stock. Tropie.
- To BUDGE. v. n. [bouger, Fr.] To stir; to move off the place: a low word.
All your ridoers are
In the lime grove, which weatherfends your cell,
They cannot budge till your release. Shakspeare.
The mouse ne'er thunn'd the cat, as they did budge
From ratsals worse than they. Shakspeare.
I thought th' hadst scorn'd to budge
For fear. Hudibras.
- BUDGE. adj. [of uncertain etymology.] Surly; stiff; formal.
O foolishness of men! that lend their ears
To those budge doctors of the flock fur. Muton.
- BUDGE. n. f. The dressed skin or fur of lambs. Dia.
- BUDGER. n. f. [from the verb.] One that moves or stirs from his place.
Let the first budger die the other's slave,
And the gods doom him after. Shakspeare.
- BUDGET. n. f. [bogette, French.]
1. A bag, such as may be easily carried.
If tinkers may have leave to live,
And bear the fowlskin budget;
Then my account I will may give,
And in the books avouch it. Shakspeare.
Sir Robert Clifford, in whose bosom, or budget, most of Perkin's secrets were laid up, was come into England. Bacon.
His budget with corruptions cramm'd,
The contributions of the damn'd. Swift.
 2. It is used for a store, or stock.
It was nature, in fine, that brought off the cat, when the fox's whole budget of inventions failed him. L'Estrange.
- BUFF. n. f. [from buffalo.]
1. A sort of leather prepared from the skin of the buffalo; used for waist belts, pouches, and military accoutrements.
A rope chain of rheums, a visage rough,
Deform'd, unfeatur'd, and a skin of buff. Dryd.

B U F

2. The skins of elks, and oxen dressed in oil, and prepared after the same manner as that of the buffalo.
3. A military coat made of thick leather, so that a blow cannot easily pierce it.
A bend, a fairy, pitiless and rough,
A wolf, nay worse, a fellow all in buff. Shaksp.
7. BUFF. v. a. [buffe, Fr.] To strike. Not in use.

There was a shock,
To have buff'd out the blood
From aught but a black.

Ben Jonson.

BUFFALO. n. f. [ital.] A kind of wild ox.

Become the unworthy bawse
Of buffaloes, salt goats, and hungry cows. Dryd.

BUFFET. n. f. [buffette, Fr.] A kind of cupboard; or set of shelves, where plate is set out to show, in a room of entertainment.

The rich buffet well-colour'd serpents grace,
And gaping Tritons spew to wash your face.

Pope.

BUFFET. n. f. [buffeto, Ital.] A blow with the fist; a box on the ear.

O, I could divide myself, and go to buffets, for roving such a dish of skimmed milk with so honourable an action. Shaksp.

A man that fortune's buffets and rewards
Has taken with equal thanks. Shaksp.

Go, baffest coward, lest I run upon thee,
And with one buffet lay thy structure low. Milt.

Round his hollow temples, and his ears,
His buckler beats; the sun of Neptune, slum'd
With these repeated buffets, quits the ground.

Dryden.

To BU'FFET. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with the hand; to box; to beat.

Why, woman, your husband is in his old luns again; he so buffets himself on the forehead, crying, Peer out, peer out! that any madness, I ever yet beheld, seemed but tameness. Shaksp.

Our ears are cudgell'd; not a word of his
But buffets better than a fist of France. Shaksp.

The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews; throwing it aside. Shaksp.

Instantly I plung'd into the sea,
And buffeting the billows to her rescue,
Redeem'd her life with half the blows of mine.

Orway.

To BU'FFET. v. n. To play a boxing-match.

If I might buffet for my love, I could lay on like a butcher. Shaksp.

BU'FFETER. n. f. [from buffet.] A boxer; one that buffets.

BU'FFLE. n. f. [beuffle, Fr.] The same with buffalo; a wild ox.

To BU'FFLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To puzzle; to be at a loss.

This was the utter ruin of that poor, angry, buffing, well-meaning mortal Pitturides, who lies equally under the contempt of both parties.

Swift.

BU'FFLEHEADED. adj. [from buffle and head.] Having a large head, like a buffalo; dull; stupid; foolish.

BUFFOON. n. f. [buffon, French.]

1. A man whose profession is to make sport, by low jests and antick postures; a jackpudding.

No prince would think himself greatly honoured, to have his proclamation canvassed on a publick stage, and become the sport of buffoons.

Watts.

2. A man that practises indecent railery.
It is the nature of drolls and buffoons, to be insolent to those that will bear it, and slavish to others.

L'Estrange.

B U G

The bold buffoon where'er they tread the green,
Their motion mimicks, but with jest obscene.

Garth.

BUFFOONERY. n. f. [from buffoon.]

1. The practice or art of a buffoon.

Courage, in an ill-bred man, has the air, and escapes not the opinion, of brutality; learning becomes pedantry, and wit buffoonery. Locke.

2. Low jests; ridiculous pranks; scurrile mirth. Dryden places the accent improperly, on the first syllable.

Where publick ministers encourage buffoonery, it is no wonder if buffoons set up for publick ministers. L'Estrange.

And whilst it lasts, let buffoonery succeed,
To make us laugh; for never was more need.

Dryden.

BUG. n. f. A stinking insect bred in old household stuff. In the following passage, wings are erroneously ascribed to it.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, which stinks and stings.

Pope.

BUG. n. f. [It is derived by some from big, by others from pug; bug, in Welsh, has the same meaning.] A frightful object; a walking spectre, imagined to be seen; generally now used for a false terror to frighten babes.

Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,

As ghastly bug their hair on end does rear,
Yet both do drive their fearfulness to feign.

Fairy Queen.

Sir, spare your threats;
The bug which you would fright me with, I seek.

Shaksp.

Hast not slept to-night? would he not, naughty man, let it sleep? a bug-bear take him.

Shaksp.

We have a horror for uncouth monsters; but, upon experience, all these bugs grow familiar and easy to us.

L'Estrange.

Such bugbear thoughts, once got into the tender minds of children, sink deep, so as not easily, if ever, to be got out again.

Locke.

To the world, no bugbear is so great,
As want of figure, and a small estate.

Pope.

BUGGINESS. n. f. [from buggy.] The state of being infested with bugs.

BUGGY. adj. [from bug.] Abounding with bugs.

BUGLE. n. f. [from bugen, Sax.]
BUGLEHORN. n. f. to bend, Skinner; from bucula, Lat. a heifer, Junius; from bugle, the bonafus, Lyc. A hunting horn.

Then took that squire an horny bugle small,
Which hung adown his side in twisted gold,
And tassels gay.

Fairy Queen.

I will have a recheate winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible baldrick.

Shaksp.

He gave his bugle horn a blast,

That through the woodland echo'd far and wide.

Tickel.

BUGLE. n. f. A shining bead of black glass.

Bugle bracelets, necklace amber,
Perfum'd for a lady's chamber.

Shaksp.

'Tis not your inkybrows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eye balls, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship.

Shaksp.

BUGLE. n. f. [from bugula, Lat.] A plant.

Miller.

BUGLE. n. f. A sort of wild ox. Phillips.

B U I

BU'GLOSS. n. f. [from buglossum, Lat.] The herb ox-tongue.

To BUILD. v. a. pret. I built, I have built. [bilden, Dutch.]

1. To raise from the ground; to make a fabrick, or an edifice.

Thou shalt not build an house unto my name.

Chronicles.

When usurers tell their gold in the field,
And whores and bawds do churches build.

Shaksp.

2. To raise in any laboured form.
When the head-dress was built up in a couple of cones and spires, which stood so excessively high on the side of the head, that a woman, who was but a pigmy without her head-dress, appeared like a Colossus upon putting it on.

Spectator.

3. To raise any thing on a support or foundation.

Love built on beauty, soon as beauty dies;
Choose this face, chang'd by no deformities.

Downe.

I would endeavour to destroy those curious, but groundless structures, that men have built up of opinions alone.

Boyle.

To BUILD. v. n.

1. To play the architect.

To build, to plant, whatever you intend,
To rear the column, or the arch to bend.

Pope.

2. To depend on; to rest on.

By a man's authority, we here understand the force which his word hath for the assurance of another's mind, that buildeth upon it.

Hobbes.

Some build rather upon the abusing of others, and putting tricks upon them, than upon foundations of their own proceedings.

Baron.

Even those who had not tasted of your favours, yet built so much on the same of your beneficence, that they bemoaned the loss of their expectations.

Dryden.

This is certainly a much surer way, than to build on the interpretations of an author, who does not consider how the ancients used to think.

Addison.

BUILDER. n. f. [from build.] He that builds; an architect.

But fore-accounting oft makes builders miss;
They found, they felt, they had no lease of bliss.

Sidney.

When they, which had seen the beauty of the first temple built by Solomon, beheld how far it excelled the second, which had not builders of like abilities, the tears of their grieved eyes the prophets endeavour'd, with comforts, to wipe away.

Hobbes.

Mark'd out for such an use, as if 'twere meant
T' invite the builder, and his choice prevent.

Danham.

Her wings with lengthen'd honour let her spread,
And, by her greatness, shew her builder's fame.

Prior.

BUILDING. n. f. [from build.] A fabrick; an edifice.

Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Have cost a mass of publick treasury.

Shaksp.

View not this spire by measure giv'n
To buildings rais'd by common hands;

That fabrick rises high as heav'n,
Whose basis on devotion stands.

Prior.

Among the great variety of ancient coins which I saw at Rome, I could not but take particular notice of such as relate to any of the buildings or statues that are still extant.

Addison.

BUILT. n. f. [from build.]

1. The form; the structure.

As is the built, so different is the fight;
Their mountain shot is on our sails design'd;

Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find.

Dryden.

2. Species of building.

BUL

There is hardly any country, which has so little shipping as Ireland; the reason must be, the scarcity of timber proper for this built.

Temple.

BULB. n. f. [from bulbus, Lat.] A round body, or root.

Take up your early autumnal tulips, and bulbs, if you will remove them. Evelyn's Calendar.

If we consider the bulb, or ball of the eye, the exterior membrane, or coat thereof, is made thick, tough, or strong, that it is a very hard matter to make a rupture in it. Ray.

BULBACEOUS. adj. [bulbaceus, Lat.] The same as bulbous. Diſt.

BULBOUS. adj. [from bulb.] Containing bulbs; consisting of bulbs; having round or roundish knobs.

There are of roots, bulbous roots, fibrous roots, and hirsute roots. And I take it, in the bulbous, the tap hirsute root to the air and sun. Bacon.

Set up your traps for vermin, especially amongst your bulbous roots. Evelyn's Calendar.

Their leaves, after they are swelled out, like a bulbous root, to make the bottle, bend inward, or come again close to the stalk. Ray.

TO BULGE. v. n. [It was originally written bilge: bilge was the lower part of the ship, where it swelled out; from bilgi, Sax. a bladder.]

1. To take in water; to founder.

Thrice round the ship was tost, Then bulg'd at once, and in the deep was lost. Dryden.

2. To jut out.

The side, or part of the side of a wall, or any timber that bulges from its bottom or foundation, is said to batter, or hang over the foundation. Mason's Mechanical Exercises.

BULIMY. n. f. [Bulimia, from Bul, an ox, and limos, hunger.] An enormous appetite, attended with fainting, and coldness of the extremities. Diſt.

BULK. n. f. [bulke, Dutch, the breast, or largest part of a man.]

1. Magnitude of material substance; mass. Against these forces there were prepared near one hundred ships; not so great of bulk indeed, but of a more nimble motion, and more serviceable. Bacon's War with Spain.

The Spaniards and Portuguese have ships of great bulk; but fitter for the merchant than the man of war, for burden than for battle. Raleigh.

Though an animal arrives at its full growth at a certain age, perhaps it never comes to its full bulk till the last period of life. Arbuthnot.

2. Size; quantity.

Things, or objects, cannot enter into the mind as they fulfill in themselves, and by their own natural bulk pass into the apprehension; but they are taken in by their ideas. South.

3. The gross; the majority; the main mass.

Those very points, in which these wise men disagreed from the bulk of the people, are points in which they agreed with the received doctrines of our nature. Addison's Freethinker.

Change in property, through the bulk of a nation, makes slow marches, and its due power always attends it. Swift.

The bulk of the debt must be lessened gradually. Swift.

4. Main fabric.

He rais'd a fight to piteous and profound, That it did seem to shatter all his bulk, And end his being. Shakspeare.

5. The main part of a ship's cargo; as, to break bulk, is to open the cargo.

BULK. n. f. [from bielike, Dan. a beam.]

A part of a building jutting out.

Here stand behind this bulk. Straight will he come.

Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home. Shakspeare.

BUL

The keeper coming up, found Jack with no life in him; he took down the body, and laid it on a bulke, and brought out the rope to the company. Arbuthnot's History of J. Bull.

BULKEHEAD. n. f. A partition made across a ship, with boards, whereby one part is divided from another. Harris.

BULKINESS. n. f. [from bulky.] Greatness of stature, or size.

Wheat, or any other grain, cannot serve instead of money because of its bulkiness, and change of its quantity. Locke.

BULKY. adj. [from bulk.] Of great size or stature.

Latreus, the bulky of the double race, Whom the spoil'd arms of slain Halesus grace. Dryden.

Huge Telephus, a formidable page, Cries vengeance; and Orestes' bulky rage, Unsatisfy'd with margins closely writ, Forms o'er the covers. Dryden.

The manner of sea engagements, which was to lare and sink the enemy's ships with the ruffia, gave bulky and high ships a great advantage. Arbuthnot.

BULL. n. f. [bulle, Dutch.]

1. The male of black-cattle; the male to a cow.

A gentlewoman, sir, and a kinwoman of my mother's.—Even such kin as the parish heifers are to the town bull. Shakspeare.

Bulls are more crisp upon the forehead than cows. Bacon.

Best age to go to bull, or calve we hold, Begins at four, and ends at ten years old. May.

2. In the scriptural sense, an enemy powerful, fierce, and violent.

Many bulls have compassed me: strong bulls of Bashan have beset me round. Psalm.

3. One of the twelve signs of the zodiack.

At last from Aries rolls the bounteous sun, And the bright Bull receives him. Thomson.

4. A letter published by the pope.

A bull is letters called apostolick by the canonists, strengthened with a leaden seal, and containing in them the decrees and commandments of the pope or bishop of Rome. Asplife.

There was another sort of ornament wore by the young nobility, called bulls; round, or of the figure of a heart, hung about their necks like diamond crosses. Those bulls came afterwards to be hung to the diplomas of the emperors and popes, from whence they had the name of bulls. Arbuthnot.

It was not till after a fresh bull of Leo's had declared how inflexible the court of Rome was in the point of abuses. Atterbury.

5. A blunder; a contradiction.

I confess it is what the English call a bull, in the expression, though the sense be manifest enough. Pope's Letters.

BULL, in composition, generally notes the large size of any thing, as bull-head, bulrush, bull-trout; and is therefore only an augmentative syllable, without much reference to its original signification.

BULL-BAITING. n. f. [from bull and bait.] The sport of baiting bulls with dogs.

What am I the wiser for knowing that Trajan was in the fifth year of his tribuneship, when he entertained the people with a horse-race or bull-baiting? Addison.

BULL-BEEF. n. f. [from bull and beef.]

Coarse beef; the flesh of bulls.

They want their porridge and their fat bull-beef. Shakspeare.

BULL-BEGGAR. n. f. [This word probably came from the insolence of those who begged, or raised money by the pope's bull.] Something terrible; something to fright children with.

These fulminations from the Vatican were turned into ridicule; and, as they were called bull-beggars, they were used as words of scorn and contempt. Asplife.

BULL-CALF. n. f. [from bull and calf.]

A he-calf; used for a stupid fellow: a term of reproach.

And, Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimbly, and roared for mercy, and still ran and roared, as ever I heard a bull-calf. Shakspeare.

BULL-DOG. n. f. [from bull and dog.]

A dog of a particular form, remarkable for his courage. He is used in baiting the bull; and this species is so peculiar to Britain, that they are said to degenerate when they are carried to other countries.

All the harmless part of him is that of a bull-dog; they are tame no longer than they are not offended. Addison.

BULL-FINCH. n. f. [rubicilla.]

A small bird, that has neither long nor whistle of its own, yet is very apt to learn, if taught by the mouth. Phillips.

The blackbird whistles from the thorny brake, The mellow bull-finch answers from the grove. Thomson.

BULL-FLY. } n. f. An insect. Phillips.

BULL-BEE. }

BULL-HEAD. n. f. [from bull and head.]

1. A stupid fellow; a blockhead.

2. A fish.

The miller's thumb, or bull-head, is a fish of no pleasing shape; it has a head big and flat, much greater than suitable to its body; a mouth very wide, and usually gaping; he is without teeth, but his lips are very rough, much like a file; he hath two fins near to his gills, which are roundish or crested; two fins under his belly, two on the back, one below the vent, and the fin of the tail is round. Nature hath painted the body of this fish with whitish, blackish, brownish spots. They are usually full of spawn all the summer, which twells their vents in the form of a dug. The bull-head begins to spawn in April; in winter we know no more what becomes of them than of eels or swallows. Walton.

3. A little black water vermin. Phillips.

BULL-TROUT. n. f. A large kind of trout.

There is, in Northumberland, a trout called a bull-trout, of a much greater length and height than any in these southern parts. Wairon.

BULL-WORT. n. f. The same with bisbopf-weed.

BULLACE. n. f. A wild four plum.

In October, and the beginning of November, come services, medlars, bullaces; roses cut or removed, to come late; holyoaks, and such like. Bacon.

BULLET. n. f. [boulet, Fr.] A round ball of metal, usually shot out of guns.

As when the devilish iron engine, wrought In deepest hell, and fram'd by furies ill,

With windy nitre and quick sulphur fraught, And ram'd with bullet round, ordain'd to kill.

Gaffer, their leader, desperately fighting amongst the foremost of the janizaries, was at once shot with two bullets, and slain. Kneller.

And as the bullet, so different is the fight; Their mounting shot is on our sails design'd; Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light, And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.

BULLION. n. f. [billon, Fr.] Gold or silver in the lump, unwrought, uncoined.

The balance of trade must of necessity be returned in coin or bullion. Bacon.

A second multitude,
With wondrous art, found out the massy ore, Severing each kind, and scum'd the bullion
drofs. Milton.

Bullion is silver whose workmanship has no value. And thus foreign coin hath no value here for its stamp, and our coin is bullion in foreign dominions. Locke.

In every vessel there is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion. Addison.

BULLITION. n. f. [from bullio, Lat.] The act or state of boiling.

There is to be observed in these dissolutions, which will not easily incorporate, what the effects are, as the bullition, the precipitation to the bottom, the ejaculation towards the top, the suspension in the midst, and the like. Bacon.

BULLOCK. n. f. [from bull.] A young bull. Why, that's spoken like an honest drover: so they sell bullocks. Shakespeare.

Some drive the herds; here the fierce bullock scours

Th' appointed way, and runs with threat'ning horns. Corneley.

Until the transportation of cattle into England was prohibited, the quickest trade of ready money here was driven by the sale of young bullocks. Temple.

BULLY. n. f. [Skinner derives this word from bulry, as a corruption in the pronunciation; which is very probably right: or from bulky, or bull-eyed; which are less probable. May it not come from bull, the pope's letter, implying the insolence of those who came invested with authority from the papal court?] A noisy, blustering, quarrelling fellow: it is generally taken for a man that has only the appearance of courage.

Mine host of the garter!—What says my bully rock? Speak scholarly and wisely. Shakespeare.

All on a sudden the doors flew open, and in comes a crew of roaring bullies, with their wenches, their dogs, and their bottles. L'Estrange.

'Tis for ridick'ous, but so true withal,
A bully cannot sleep without a brawl. Dryden.

A scolding hero is, at the worst, a more tolerable character than a bully in petticoats. Addison.

The little man is a bully in his nature, but, when he grows choleric, I confine him till his wrath is over. Addison.

To BULLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To overbear with noise or menaces.

Prentices, parish clerks, and hedgers meet,
He that is drunk, or bully'd, pays the treat. King.

To BULLY. v. n. To be noisy and quarrelsome.

BULLRUSH. n. f. [from bull and rush.] A large rush, such as grows in rivers, without knots; though Dryden has given it the epithet knotty; confounding it, probably, with the reed.

To make fine cages for the nightingale,
And baskets of bulrushes, was my wont. Spenser.

All my praises are but as a bulrush cast upon a stream; they are born by the strength of the current. Dryden.

The edges were with bending osiers crown'd;
The bulrush nest in order stood,
And all within of reeds, a trembling wood. Dryden.

BULLWARK. n. f. [bolwerck, Dutch; probably only from its strength and largeness.]

1. What is now called a bastion.

But him the squire made quickly to retreat,
Encountering fierce with single sword in hand,

And 'twixt him and his lord did like a bulwark stand. Spenser.

They oft repair
Their earthen bulwarks 'gainst the ocean flood. Fairfax.

We have bulwarks round us;
Within our walls are troops enur'd to toil. Addison.

2. A fortification.
Taking away needful bulwarks, divers were demolish'd upon the sea coasts. Hayward.

Our naval strength is a bulwark to the nation. Addison.

3. A security; a screen; a shelter.

Some making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Shakespeare.

To BULLWARK. v. a. [from the noun.]

To fortify; to strengthen with bulwarks.

And yet no bulwark'd town, or distant coast,
Preserves the beauteous youth from being seen. Addison.

BUM. n. f. [bomme, Dutch.] The buttocks; the part on which we sit.

The wisest aunt telling the saddest tale,
Sometime for threefoot stool mislakketh me,
Then slip I from her bum, down topples she. Shakespeare.

This said, he gently rais'd the knight,
And set him on his bum upright. Hudibras.

From dusty shops neglected authors come,
Martyrs of pie, and relics of the bum. Dryden.

The learned Sydenham does not doubt,
But proof and thought will bring the gout;
And that with bum on couch we lie,
Because our reason's soar'd too high. W—n.

BUMBA'LLIFF. n. f. [This is a corruption of bound bailiff, pronounced by gradual corruption boun, bun, bum bailiff.]

A bailiff of the meanest kind; one that is employed in arrests.

Go, sir Andrew, fetch me for him at the corner of the orchard, like a bumbailiff. Shakespeare.

BUM-BARD. n. f. [wrong written for bombard; which see.] A great gun; a black jack; a leather pitcher.

Yond lame black cloud, yond huge one looks Like a foul bumbard, that would shed his liquor. Shakespeare.

BUM-BAST. n. f. [falsely written for bombast; bombist and bombastine being mentioned, with great probability, by Junius, as coming from boom, a tree, and seis, silk; the silk or cotton of a tree. Mr. Stevens, with much more probability, deduces them all from bombycinus.]

1. A cloth made by sewing one stuff upon another; patchwork.

The usual bumbast of black bits sewed into ermine, our English women are made to think very fine. Grew.

2. Linen stuffed with cotton; ruffling; wadding.

We have receiv'd your letters full of love,
And, in our maiden council, rated them
As courtship, pleasant jest, and courtesy,
As bumbast, and as lining to the time. Shakespeare.

BUMP. n. f. [perhaps from bum, as being prominent.] A swelling; a protuberance.

It had upon its brow a bump as big as a young cockrel's snout; a perilous knock, and it cried bitterly. Shakespeare.

Not though his teeth are beaten out, his eyes
Hang by a string, in bumps his forehead rise. Dryden.

To BUMP. v. a. [from bombus, Lat.] To make a loud noise, or bomb. [See BOMB.] It is applied, I think, only to the bitter.

Then to the water's brink she laid her head,
And as a bitour bumps within a reed,
To thee alone, O lake, she laid— Dryden.

BUMPER. n. f. [from bump.] A cup filled till the liquor swells over the brim.

Places his delight
All day in playing bumpers, and at night
Reels to the bawls. Dryden's Juvenal.

BUMPKIN. n. f. [This word is of uncertain etymology; Henshaw derives it from pumkin, a kind of worthless gourd, or melon. This seems harsh; yet we use the word cabbage-head in the same sense. Bump is used among us for a knob, or lump: may not bumpkin be much the same with clodpate, loggerhead, block, and blockhead?] An awkward heavy rulkick; a country lout.

The poor bumpkin, that had never heard of such delights before, bliss'd herself at the change of her condition. L'Estrange.

A heavy bumpkin, taught with daily care,
Can never dance three steps with a becoming air. Dryden.

In his white cloak the magistrate appears;
The country bumpkin the same livery wears. Dryden.

It was a favour to admit them to breeding; they might be ignorant bumpkins and clowns, if they pleased. Locke.

BUMPKINLY. adj. [from bumpkin.] Having the manners or appearance of a clown; clownish.

He is a simple, blundering, and yet conceited fellow, who, aiming at description, and the rustick wonderful, gives an air of bumpkinly romance to all he tells. Clarissa.

BUNCH. n. f. [bunker, Danish, the crags of the mountains.]

1. A hard lump; a knob.

They will carry their treasures upon the bunches of camels to a people that shall not profit them. Isaiah.

He felt the ground, which he had wont to find even and soft, to be grown hard, with little round balls or bunches, like hard boiled eggs. Boyle.

2. A cluster; many of the same kind growing together.

Vines, with clust'ring bunches growing. Shak.

Titian said, that he knew no better rule for the distribution of the lights and shadows, than his observation drawn from a bunch of grapes. Dryden.

For thee, large bunches load the bending vine,
And the last blessings of the year are thine. Dryden.

3. A number of things tied together.

And on his arms a bunch of keys he bore. Fairy Queen.

All? I know not what you call all; but if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of rascals. Shakespeare.

Ancient Janus, with his double face
And bunch of keys, the porter of the place. Dryden.

The mother's bunch of keys, or any thing they cannot hurt themselves with, serves to divert little children. Locke.

4. Any thing bound into a knot: as, a bunch of ribband; a tuft.

Upon the top of all his lofty crest,
A bunch of hairs discover'd diversly,
With sprinkled pearl and gold full richly dress'd. Spenser.

To BUNCH. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell out in a bunch; to grow out in protuberances.

It has the resemblance of a champagne before it is opened, bunching out into a large round knob at one end. Woodward.

BUNCHBACKED. adj. [from bunch and back.] Having bunches on the back; crookbacked.

The day shall come, that thou shalt wish for me,
To help thee curie this pain'ous bun-bush'd toad. Shakspeare.

BUNCHINESS. n. f. [from bunchy.] The quality of being bunchy, or growing in bunches.

BUNCHY. adj. [from bunch.] Growing in bunches; having tufts.

He is more especially distinguished from other birds, by his bunchy tail, and the shortness of his legs. Grew.

BUNDLE. n. f. [byndle, Saxon, from bynd.]

1. A number of things bound together.

As to the bundles of petitions in parliament, they were, for the most part, petitions of private persons. Hale.

Try, lads, can you this bundle break;—

Then bids the youngest of the six

Take up a well-bound heap of sticks. Swift.

2. A roll; any thing rolled up.

She carried a great bundle of Flanders lace under her arm; but finding herself overladen, she dropped the good man, and brought away the bundle. Spectator.

TO BUNDLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To tie in a bundle; to tie together: with up.

We ought to put things together as well as we can, define causa; but, after all, several things will not be bundled together, under our terms and ways of speaking. Locke.

See how the double nation lies,
Like a rich coat with flouts of frize;
As if a man, in making posies,
Should bundle thistles up with roses. Swift.

BUNG. n. f. [bing, Welsh.] A stopple for a barrel.

After three nights are expired, the next morning pull out the bung stick, or plug. Mortimer.

TO BUNG. v. a. [from the noun.] To stop; to close up.

BUNG-HOLE. n. f. [from bung and bole.] The hole at which the barrel is filled, and which is afterward stopped up.

Why may not imagination trace the noblest dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bung-hole? Shakspeare.

TO BUNGLE. v. n. [See BUNGLER.] To perform clumsily.

When men want light,
They make but bungling work. Dryden.

Letters to me are not seldom opened, and then sealed in a bungling manner before they come to my hands. Swift.

TO BUNGLE. v. a. To botch; to manage clumsily; to conduct awkwardly; with up.

Other devils, that suggest by treasons,
Do hatch and bungle up damnation,
With patches, colours, and with fumes, being fetcht
From glitt'ring semblances of piety. Shakspeare.
They make lame mischief, though they mean
it well:

Their interest is not finely drawn, and hid,
But seams are coarsely bungled up, and seen. Dryden.

BUNGLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A botch; an awkwardness; an inaccuracy; a clumsy performance.

Errors and bungles are committed, when the matter is inapt or contumacious. Ray.

BUNGLER. n. f. [bungler, Welsh; q. bôn y glér, i. e. the last or lowest of the profession. Davies.] A bad workman; a clumsy performer; a man without skill.

Painters, at the first, were such bunglers, and so rude, that, when they drew a cow or a hog, they were fain to write over the head what it was; otherwise the beholder knew not what to make of it. Prichard on Drawing.

Hard features every bungler can command;
To draw true beauty shews a master's hand.

A bungler thus, who scarce the nail can hit,
With driving wrong will make the pannel split. Dryden.

BUNGLINGLY. adv. [from bungling.] Clumsily; awkwardly.

To denominate them monsters, they must have had some system of parts, compounded of solids and fluids, that executed, though but bunglingly, their peculiar functions. Bentley.

BUNN. n. f. [bunelo, Span.] A kind of sweet bread.

Thy songs are sweeter to mine ear,
Than to the thirsty cattle rivers clear,
Or winter porridge to the lab'ring youth,
Or bunns and sugar to the damsel's tooth. Gay.

BUNT. n. f. [corrupted, as Skinner thinks, from bent.] A swelling part; an increasing cavity.

The wear is a tooth, reaching slopewise through the ooze, from the land to low water mark, and having in it a bunt, or cod, with an eye-hook, where the fish entering, upon the coming back with the ebb, are stopped from issuing out again, forsaken by the water, and left dry on the ooze. Cuvier.

TO BUNT. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell out: as, the sail bunts out.

BUNTER. n. f. A cant word for a woman who picks up rags about the street; and used, by way of contempt, for any low vulgar woman.

BUNTING. n. f. [emberiza alba.] A bird.

I took this lark for a bunting. Shakspeare.

BUNTING. n. f. The stuff of which a ship's colours are made.

BUOY. n. f. [boué, or boge, Fr. boya, Span.] A piece of cork or wood floating on the water, tied to a weight at the bottom.

The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice; and yond tall anchoring bark
Diminish'd to her cock; her cock a buoy,
Almost too small for sight. Shakspeare.

Like buoys, that never sink into the flood,
On learning's surface we but lie and nod. Pope.

TO BUOY. v. a. [from the noun. The u is mute in both.] To keep afloat; to bear up.

All art is used to sink episcopacy, and launch presbytery, in England; which was lately buoyed up in Scotland, by the like artifice of a covenant. King Charles.

The water which rises out of the alysis, for the supply of springs and rivers, would not have stopped at the surface of the earth, but marched directly up into the atmosphere, wherever there was heat enough in the air to continue its ascent, and buoy it up. Woodward's Natural History.

TO BUOY. v. n. To float; to rise by specifick lightness.

Rising merit will buoy up at last. Pope.

BUOYANCY. n. f. [from buoyant.] The quality of floating.

All the winged tribes owe their flight and buoyancy to it. Derham's Physico-Theology.

BUOYANT. adj. [from buoy.] Floating; light; that will not sink. Dryden uses the word, perhaps improperly, for something that has density enough to hinder a floating body from sinking.

I swam with the tide, and the water under me was buoyant. Dryden.

His once so vivid nerves,
So full of buoyant spirit, now no more Inspire the courier. Thomson's Autumn.

BUR, BOUR, BOR, come from the Sax.

bur, an inner-chamber, or place of shade and retirement. Giljon's Camden.

BUR. n. f. [lappa: bourre, Fr. is down; the bur being filled with a soft tomentum, or down.] A rough head of a plant, called a burdock, which sticks to the hair or clothes.

Nothing terms

But hateful docks, rough thistles, keckles, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility. Shakspeare.

Hang off, thou cat, thou bur; vile thing, let loose!

Or I will shake thee from me like a serpent. Shakspeare.

Dependents and suitors are always the burs,
and sometimes the briars, of favourites. Wotton.

Whither betake her

From the chill dew, amongst rude burs and thistles. Milton.

And where the vales with violets once were crown'd,

Now knotty burs and thorns disgrace the ground. Dryden.

A fellow stuck like a bur, that there was no shaking him off. Richardson.

BURBOT. n. f. A fish full of prickles. Ditt.

BURDELAIS. n. f. A sort of grape.

BURDEN. n. f. [býrden, Sax. and therefore properly written burthen. It is supposed to come from burdo, Lat. a mule.]

1. A load; something to be carried.

Camels have their provender
Only for bearing burdens, and sore blows
For finking under them. Shakspeare.

It is of use in lading of ships, and may help to shew what burden, in the several kinds, they will bear. Baron's Physicall Remains.

2. Something grievous or wearisome.

Couldst thou support
That burden, heavier than the earth to bear? Paradise Lost.

None of the things that are to learn, should ever be made a burden to them, or imposed on them as a task. Locke.

Deaf, giddy, helpless, left alone,
To all my friends a burden grown. Swift.

3. A birth. Obsolete.

Thou hadst a wife once, call'd Æmilia,
That bore thee at a burden two fair sons. Shakspeare.

or the capacity of a ship: as, a ship of a hundred tons burden.

TO BURDEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To load; to incumber.

Burden not thyself above thy power. Ecclesi.
I mean not that other men be eased, and you burdened. Corinthians.

With meats and drinks they had suffic'd,
Not burden'd nature. Milton.

BURDENER. n. f. [from burden.] A loader; an oppressor.

BURDENOUS. adj. [from burden.]

1. Grievous; oppressive; wearisome.

Make no jest of that which hath so earnestly pierced me through, nor let that be light to thee which to me is so burdenous. Sidney.

2. Useless; cumbersome.

To what can I be useful, wherein serve,
But to sit idle on the household hearth,
A burdenous drone, to visitants a gaze. Milton.

BURDENSOME. adj. [from burden.] Grievous; troublesome to be born.

His leisure told him that his time was come,
And lack of load made his life burdensome. Milton.
Could I but live till burdensome they prove,
My life would be immortal as my love. Dryden.

BUR

Assistances always attending us, upon the easy condition of our prayers, and by which the most burdensome duty will become light and easy.

Rogers.

Exit through the thick they heard one rudely rush,
With noise whereof, he from his lofty steed
Down fell to ground, and crept into a bush,
To hide his coward head from dying dread. Fairy Queen.

The poller, and exacter of fees, justifies the resemblance of the courts of justice to the bush, whereunto while the sheep flies for defence from the weather, he is sure to lose part of the fleece. Bacon's Essays.

Her heart was that strange bush, whose sacred fire

Religion did not consume, but inspire
Such piety, so chaste use of God's day,
That what we turn'd to feast, the turn'd to pray. Donne.

With such a care,

As roses from their stalks we tear,
When we would still prefer them new,
And fresh as on the bush they grew. Waller.

The sacred ground

Shall weeds and poisonous plants refuse to bear;
Each common bush shall Syrian roses wear. Dryden.

2. A bough of a tree fixed up at a door, in the other. Bacon.

7. Something to be transacted.

They were far from the Zidonians, and had no business with any one. Judges.

8. Something required to be done.

To those people that dwell under or near the equator, this spring would be most pestilent; as for those countries that are nearer the poles, in which number are our own, and the most considerable nations of the world, a perpetual spring will not do their business; they must have longer days, a nearer approach of the sun. Bentley.

9. To do one's business. To kill, destroy, or ruin him.

BUSK. n. f. [busque, Fr.] A piece of steel or whalebone, worn by women to strengthen their stays.

That crawl'd awhile upon a bufling world,
And now am trampled to my dust again. Southerne.

Ye sov'reign lords, who sit like gods in state,
Aving the world, and bufling to be great! Granv.

BUSTLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A tumult; a hurry; a commotion.

Willow's self,
Oft seeks to sweet retired solitude:
She plumes her feathers, and lets grow her wings,
That in the various buffle of resort
Were all too ruffled. Milton.

This is the creature that pretends to knowledge, and that makes such a noise and bufling of opinions. Glauville.

Such a doctrine made a strange buffle and disturbance in the world, which then fate warm and easy in a free enjoyment of their lusts. South.

If the count had given them a pot of ale after it, all would have been well, without any of this buffle. Spectator.

BUSTLER. n. f. [from buffle.] An active stirring man.

BUSY. adj. [byrgian, Sax. It is pronounced as bissy, or bizzy.]

1. Employed with earnestness.
My mistress sends you word that she is busy, and cannot come. Shakspeare.

2. Bufling; active; meddling.
The next thing which she waking looks upon,
On meddling monkey, or on busy ape,
She shall pursue it with the foul of love. Shakspeare.
Thus busy pow'r is working day and night;
For when the outward senses rest do take,
A thousand dreams, fantastical and light,
With flutt'ring wings, do keep her still awake. Davies.

The coming spring would first appear,
And all this place with roses flow,
If busy feet would let them grow. Waller.

All written since that time, seem to have little more than events we are glad to know, or the controversy of opinions, wherein the busy world has been so much employed. Temple.

Religious motives and instincts are so busy in the heart of every reasonable creature, that no man would hope to govern a society, without regard to those principles. Addison.

3. Troublesome; vexatiously importunate or intensive.

The christians, sometimes valiantly receiving the enemy, and sometimes charging them again, repulsed the proud enemy, still busy with them. Knight's History of the Turks.

To Bu'sy. v. a. [from the noun.] To employ; to engage; to make or keep busy.

He in great passion all this while did dwell,
More busy his quick eyes her face to view,
Than his dull ears to hear what she did tell. Fairy Queen.

The pleasure which I took at my friend's pleasure herein, idly busied me thus to express the same. Garew's Survey.

Be it thy course to busy giddy minds
With foreign quarrels. Shakspeare.

While they were busied to lay the foundations, their buildings were overthrown by an earthquake, and many thousands of the Jews were overwhelmed. Raleigh.

The poems which busied the devotion of the first ages, and the curiosity of the latter. Deane of Poetry.

The ideas it is busied about, should be natural and congenial ones, which it had in itself. Locke.

The learning and disputes of the schools have been much busied about genius and spirit. Locke.

For the rest, it must be owned, he does not busied himself by entering deep into any party, but rather spends his time in acts of hospitality. Swift.

BUT

BUSYBODY. n. f. [from busy and body.]

A vain, meddling, and fantastical person.
Going from house to house, tattlers and busybodies are the canker and rust of idleness, as idleness is the rust of time. Taylor.

Busybodies and intermeddlers are a dangerous sort of people to have to do withal. L'Estrange.
She is well acquainted with all the favourite servants, busybodies, dependants, and poor relations, of all persons of condition in the whole town. Spectator.

BUT. conjunct. [bute, butan, Saxon.]

1. Except.
An omission of immaterial virtues we are a little doubtful to propound, it is so prodigious: but that it is so constantly avouched by many. Bacon.

Who can it be, ye gods! but perjured Lycon?
Who can inspire such storms of rage, but Lycon?
Where as my sword left one so black, but Lycon? Smith.

Your poem hath been printed, and we have no objection but the obscurity of several passages, by our ignorance in facts and persons. Swift.

2. Except that; unless; had it not been that: in this sense we now write but that. See sense 11.

And but infirmity,
Which waits upon worn times, hath something seized
His with'd ability, he had himself
The lands and waters measur'd. Shakspeare.

3. Yet; nevertheless. It sometimes only enforces yet.

Then let him speak, and any that shall stand without shall hear his voice plainly; but yet made extreme sharp and exile, like the voice of puppets: and yet the articulate sounds of the words will not be confounded. Bacon.

Our wants are many and grievous to be born, but quite of another kind. Swift.

4. The particle which introduces the minor of a syllogism; now.

If there be a liberty and possibility for a man to kill himself to-day, then it is not absolutely necessary that he shall live till to-morrow; but there is such a liberty, therefore no such necessity. Bramhall against Hobbes.

God will one time or another make a difference between the good and the evil. But there is little or no difference made in this world; therefore there must be another world, wherein this difference shall be made. Watts's Logic.

5. Only; nothing more than.

If my offence be of mortal kind,
That not my service, past or present sorrows,
Can ransom me into his love again;
But to know so, must be my benefit. Shakspeare.
What nymph softer his voice but hears,
Will be my rival, though she have but eyes. Ben Jonson.

No, Aurengzebe, you merit all my heart,
And I'm too noble but to give a part. Dryden.
Did but men consider the true notion of God,
he would appear to be full of goodness. Tillotson.
If we do but put virtue and vice in equal circumstances, the advantages of ease and pleasure will be found to be on the side of religion. Tillotson.

The mischiefs or harms that come by play, inadvertency or ignorance, are not at all, or but very gently, to be taken notice of. Locke.
If a reader examines Horace's Art of Poetry, he will find but very few precepts in it, which he may not meet with in Aristotle. Addison.
Prepar'd I stand: he was but born to try
The lot of man, to suffer and to die. Pope.

6. Than.

The full moon was no sooner up, and shining in all its brightness, but he opened the gate of Paradise. Guardian.

7. But that; without this consequence that.

BUT

Frosts that constrain the ground
Do seldom their usurping power withdraw,
But raging floods pursue their hasty hand. Dryden.

8. Otherwise than that.
It cannot be but nature hath some director, of infinite power, to guide her in all her ways. Hooker.

Who shall believe,
But you misuse the reverence of your place? Shakspeare.

9. Not more than; even.

A genius so elevated and unconfined as Mr. Cowley's, was but necessary to make Pindar speak English. Dryden.

10. By any other means than.
Beroc but now I left; whom, pin'd with pain,
Her age and anguish from these rites detain. Dryden.

It is evident, in the instance I gave but now, the consciousness went along
Out of that will I cause those of Cyprus to mutiny; whose qualification shall come into no true taste again, but by transplanting of Cassio. Shakspeare.

11. If it were not for this; that; if it were not that. Obsolete.

Believe me, I had rather have lost my purse full of cruzades. And, but my noble Moor is true of mind, and made of no such hatefuls as jealous creatures are, it were enough to put him to ill-thinking. Shakspeare.

I here do give thee that with all my heart,
Which, but thou hadst already, with all my heart I would keep from thee. Shakspeare.

12. However; howbeit: a word of indeterminate connection.

I do not doubt but I have been to blame; but, to pursue the end for which I came, Unite your subjects first, then let us go And pour their common rage upon the foe. Dryden.

13. It is used after no doubt, no question, and such words, and signifies the same with that. It sometimes is joined with that.

They made no account, but that the navy should be absolutely master of the seas. Bacon.
I fancied to myself a kind of ease in the change of the paroxysm; never suspecting but that the humour would have wasted itself. Dryden.

There is no question but the king of Spain will reform most of the abuses. Addison.

14. That. This seems no proper sense in this place.

It is not therefore impossible but I may alter the complexion of my play, to restore myself into the good graces of my fair critics. Dryden.

15. Otherwise than. Obsolete.

I should find

To think but nobly of my grandmother. Shakspeare.

16. A particle by which the meaning of the foregoing sentence is bounded or restrained; only.

Thus fights Ulysses, thus his fame extends;

A formidable man, but to his friends. Dryden.

17. A particle of objection; yet it may be objected: it has sometimes yet with it.

But yet, madam——
I do not like but yet; it does allay
The good precedence; lie upon but yet!
But yet is as a jailour, to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Shakspeare.

Must the heart then have been formed and constituted, before the blood was in being? But here again, the substance of the heart itself is most certainly made and nourished by the blood, which is conveyed to it by the coronary arteries. Bentley.

18. But for; without; had not this been.

Rash man, forbear! but for some unbelief,

My joy had been as fatal as my grief. Hudibras.

Her head was bare,
But for her native ornament of hair,
Which in a simple knot was tied above. Dryden.

When the fair boy receiv'd the gift of night,
And, but for mischief, you had died for spite. Dryd.
BUT. n. f. [bout, French.] A boundary.
But, if I ask you what I mean by that word,
you will answer, I mean this or that thing, you cannot tell which; but if I join it with the words in construction and sense, as, but I will not, a but of wine, but and boundary, the ram will but, shoot at but, the meaning of it will be as ready to you as any other word. Holder.
BUT. n. f. [In sea language.] The end of any plank which joins to another on the outside of a ship, under water. Harris.

BUT-END. n. f. [from but and end.] The blunt end of any thing; the end upon which it rests.

The reserve of foot galled their foot with several volleys, and then fell on them with the but-ends of their muskets. Clarendon.

Thy weapon was a good one when I wielded
it, but the but-end remains in my hands. Arbuth.
Some of the soldiers accordingly pushed them forward, with the but-ends of their pikes, into my reach. Swift.

BUTCHER. n. f. [boucher, Fr.]

1. One that kills animals to sell their flesh.

The shepherd and the butcher both may look upon one sheep with pleasing conceits. Sidney.

Hence be learnt the butcher's guile,
How to cut your throat, and smile;
Like a butcher doom'd for life
In his mouth to wear his knife. Swift.

2. One that is delighted with blood.

Honour and renown are bestowed on conquerors, who, for the most part, are but the great butchers of mankind. Locke.

TO BUTCHER. v. a. [from the noun.]

To kill; to murder.

In suffering thus thy brother to be slaughter'd
Thou shew'st the naked pathway to thy life,
Teaching stern murder how to butcher thee. Shakespeare.

Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
And shamefully by you my hopes are butcher'd. Shakespeare.

The poison and the dagger are at hand to butcher a hero, when the poet wants brains to save him. Dryden.

BUTCHERS-BROOM, OR KNEEHOLLY.

n. f. [ruscus, Lat.] A tree.

The roots are sometimes used in medicine, and the green shoots are cut and bound into bundles, and sold to the butchers, who use it as befoms to sweep their blocks; from whence it had the name of butchers-broom. Miller.

BUTCHERLINESS. n. f. [from butcherly.]

A brutal, cruel, savage, butcherly manner.

BUTCHERLY. adj. [from butcher.] Cruel;

bloody; grossly and clumsily barbarous.

There is a way which, brought into schools, would take away this butcherly fear in making of Latin. Ascham.

What stratagems, how fell, how butcherly
This deadly counsel daily doth beget! Shaksp.

BUTCHERY. n. f. [from butcher.]

1. The trade of a butcher.

Yet this man, so ignorant in modern butchery, has cut up half an hundred heroes, and quartered five or six miserable lovers, in every tragedy he has written. Pope.

2. Murder; cruelty; slaughter.

If thou delight to view thy heinous deeds,
Behold this patron of thy butcheries. Shakespeare.

The butchery, and the breach of hospitality, is represented in this fable under the mask of friendship. L'Estrange.

Can be a son to lost remorse incite,
Whom goats, and blood, and butchery delight? Dryden.

3. The place where animals are killed;
the place where blood is shed.

There is no place, this house is but a butchery;
Abhor it, fear it, do not enter it. Shakespeare.

The groom his fellow groom at butts desires,
And bends his bow, and levels with his eyes. Dryden.

2. The point at which the endeavour is directed.

Be not afraid though you do see me weapon'd;
Here is my journey's end, here is my butt,
The very sea-mark of my journey's end. Shaksp.

3. The object of aim; the thing against which any attack is directed.

The papists were the most common-place, and the butt against whom all the arrows were directed. Clarendon.

4. A man upon whom the company breaks their jests.

I played a sentence or two at my butt, which I thought very smart, when my ill genius suggested to him such a reply as got all the laughter on his side. Spectator.

5. A blow given by a horned animal.

6. A stroke given in fencing.

If disputes arise

Among the champions for the prize;

To prove who gave the fairer butt,

John shews the chalk on Robert's coat. Prior.

Young and florid blood, rather than rapid and cachectical. Arbutnot on Air.

The crude chyle swims in the blood, and appears as milk in the blood, of some persons who are cachectic. Floyer.

CACHEXY. n. f. [καχξία.] A general word to express a great variety of symptoms: most commonly it denotes such a distemperature of the humours, as hinders nutrition, and weakens the vital and animal functions; proceeding from weakness of the fibres, and an abuse of the non-naturals, and often from severe acute distempers. Arbutnot.

CACHINNA'TION. n. f. [cachinnatio, Lat.] A loud laughter. Diſt.

CACKEREL. n. f. A fish, said to make those who eat it laxative.

To CACKLE. v. n. [καεχελεν, Dutch.] 1. To make a noise as a goose.

The nightingale, if she should sing by day, When every goose is cackling, would be thought No better a musician than the wren. Shaks.

Or rob the Roman geese of all their glories, And save the state, by cackling to the Tories. Pope.

2. Sometimes it is used for the noise of a hen.

The trembling widow, and her daughters twain,

This woful cackling cry with horror heard Of those distracted dunces in the yard. Dryden.

3. To laugh; to giggle.

Nic grinned, cackled, and laughed, till he was like to kill himself; and fell a striking and dancing about the room. Arbutnot.

4. To talk idly; to prattle.

CACKLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The voice of a goose or fowl.

The silver goose before the shining gate There flew, and by her cackle sav'd the state. Dryden.

2. Idle talk; prattle.

2. A telltale; a tattler.

CACOCY'MICAL. } adj. [from cacochymy.]

CACOCY'MICK. } my. Having the humours corrupted.

It will prove very advantageous, if only cacochymick, to clarify his blood with a laxative.

Harvey on Consumption.

If the body be cacochymical, the tumours are apt to degenerate into very venomous and malignant abscesses.

The ancient writers distinguished putrid fevers, by putrefaction of blood, cholera, melancholy, and phlegm; and this is to be explained by an effervescence happening in a particular cacochymical blood. Floyer on the Humours.

CACOCY'MY. n. f. [κακοχυμία.] A depravation of the humours from a sound state, to what the physicians call by a general name of a cacochymy. Spots, and discolorations of the skin, are signs of weak fibres; for the lateral vessels, which lie out of the road of circulation, let gross humours pass, which could not, if the vessels had their due degree of stricture. Arbutnot on Aliments.

Strong beer, a liquor that attributes the half of its ill qualities to the hops, consisting of an acrimonious fiery nature, lets the blood, upon the least cacochymy, into an ergasmus. Harvey.

CACOPHONY. n. f. [κακοφωνία.] A bad sound of words.

CAD

These things shall lie by, till you come to carp at them, and alter rhimes, grammar, triplets, and cacophonies of all kinds. Pope to Swift.

To CACU'MINATE. v. a. [cacumino, Lat.]

To make sharp or pyramidal. Diſt.

CADA'VEROUS. adj. [cadaver, Lat.] Having the appearance of a dead carcass; having the qualities of a dead carcass.

In vain do they scruple to approach the dead, who livingly are cadaverous, for fear of any outward pollution, whose temper pollutes themselves. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The urine, long detained in the bladder, as well as glass, will grow red, foetid, cadaverous, and alkaline. The case is the same with the stagnant waters of hydropical perions. Arbut.

CA'DDIS. n. f. [This word is used in Erse for the variegated clothes of the Highlanders]

1. A kind of tape or riband.

He hath ribbons of all the colours of the rainbow; inkle, caddises, cambricks, lawns; why, he fings them over as if they were gods and goddesses. Shakspeare.

2. A kind of worm or grub found in a case of straw.

He loves the mayfly, which is bred of the codworm, or caddis; and these make the trout bold and lusty. Walton's Angler.

CADE. adj. [It is deduced, by Skinner, from cadeler, Fr. an old word, which signifies to breed up tenderly.] Tame; soft; delicate; as, a cade lamb, a lamb bred at home.

To CADE. v. a. [from the adj.] To breed up in softness.

CADE. n. f. [cadus, Lat.] A barrel.

We John Cade, so terrified of our supposed father.—Or rather of stealing a cade of herrings. Shakspeare.

Soon as thy liquor from the narrow cells Of close press'd hulks is freed, thou must refrain Thy thirty soul; let none persuade to broach Thy thick, unwholesome, undigested cares. Philips.

CADE-WORM. n. f. The same with caddis.

CAD'ENCE. } n. f. [cadence, Fr.]

CAD'ENCY. }

1. Fall; state of sinking; decline.

Now was the sun in western cadence low From noon; and gentle airs, due at their hours, To fan the earth, now wak'd. Milton.

2. The fall of the voice; sometimes the general modulation of the voice.

The sliding, in the close or cadence, hath an agreement with the figure in rhetoric, which they call præter cæpitulum; for there is a pleasure even in being deceived. Bacon.

There be words not made with lungs, Sententious show'rs! O let them fall!

Their cadence is rhetorical. Craſhaw.

3. The flow of verses, or periods.

The words, the versification, and all the other elegancies of sound, as cadences, and turns of words upon the thought, perform exactly the same office both in dramatic and epic poetry. Dryden.

The cadency of one line must be a rule to that of the next; as the sound of the former must slide gently into that which follows. Dryden.

4. The tone or sound.

Hollow rocks retain The sound of blustering winds, which all night long

Had rous'd the sea, now with hoarse cadence lull Sea-faring men, o'erwatch'd. Milton.

He hath a confused remembrance of words since he left the university; he hath lost half their meaning, and puts them together with no regard, except to their cadence. Swift.

5. [In horsemanship.] An equal measure or proportion which a horse observes in all his motions, when he is thoroughly managed. Farrier's Dict.

CA'DENT. adj. [cadens, Lat.] Falling down.

CA'DEW. n. f. A straw worm. See CAD-DIS. Diſt.

CA'DGER. n. f. [from cadge, or cage, a panier.] A huckster; one who brings butter, eggs, and poultry, from the country to market.

CADI. n. f. A magistrate among the Turks, whose office seems nearly to answer to that of a justice of peace.

CADILLACK. n. f. A sort of pear.

CÆCIAS. n. f. [Lat.] A wind from the northeast.

Now, from the north, Boreas and Cæcias, and Argætes loud, And Thracias, rend the woods, and seas upturn. Milton.

CÆSAREAN. See CESARIAN.

CÆSURA. n. f. [Lat.] A figure in poetry, by which a short syllable after a complete foot is made long.

CAFTAN. n. f. [Perſick.] A Persian or Turkish vest or garment.

CAG. n. f. A barrel, or wooden vessel, containing four or five gallons. Sometimes keg.

CAGE. n. f. [cage, Fr. from cavea, Lat.]

1. An enclosure of twigs or wire, in which birds are kept.

See whether a cage can please a bird? or whether a dog grow not fiercer with tying? Sidney.

He taught me how to know a man in love; in which cage of ruffles, I am sure, you are not a prisoner. Shakspeare.

Though slaves, like birds that sing not in a cage,

They lost their genius, and poetick rage; Homer's again and Pindars may be found, And his great actions with their numbers crown'd. Walter.

And parrots, imitating human tongue, And singing birds in silver cages hung;

And ev'ry fragrant flow'r, and od'rous green, Were sorted well, with lumps of amber laid between. Dryden.

A man recurs to our fancy, by remembering his garment; a beast, bird, or fish, by the cage, or court-yard, or cistern, wherein it was kept. Watson the Mould.

The reason why so few marriages are happy, is, because young ladies spend their time in making nets, not in making cages. Swift.

2. A place for wild beasts, enclosed with pallisadoes.

3. A prison for petty malefactors.

To CAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To enclose in a cage.

He, swain and pamp'ring with high fare, Sits down, and sports, cag'd in his basket-chair. Denne.

CAIMAN. n. f. The American name of a crocodile.

To CAJOLE. v. a. [cageoller, Fr.] To flatter; to soothe; to coax; a low word.

Thought he, 'tis no mean part of civil State prudence, to cajole the devil. Hudibras.

The one affronts him, while the other cajoles and pities him: takes up his quarrel, shakes his head at it, clasps his hand upon his breast, and then protests and protests. L'Estrange.

My tongue that wanted to cajole
I try'd, but not a word would trol. Rymer.

CAJOLE. n. f. [from cajole.] A flatterer; a wheedler.

CAJOLERY. n. f. [cajolerie, Fr.] Flattery.

CAISSON. n. f. [French.]

1. A chest of bombs or powder, laid in the enemy's way, to be fired at their approach.

2. A wooden case in which the pieces of brigs are built within the water.

CATTIFF. n. f. [cattivo, Ital. a slave;
whence it came to signify a bad man, with some implication of meanness; as knave in English, and fur in Latin; so certainly does slavery destroy virtue.

Ἡμῶν τὸς ἀπὸ τῆς ἀνδρείας δόξατος ἄνθρωπος.
Homer.

A slave and a scoundrel are signified by the same words in many languages.] A mean villain; a despicable knave: it often implies a mixture of wickedness and misery.

Vile cattiff! vassal of dread and despair,
Unworthy of the common breathed air!
Why livest thou, dead dog, a longer day,
And dost not unto death thyself prepare? Spens.

'Tis not impossible
But one, the wicked'st cattiff on the ground,
May term as thy, as grave, as just, as absolute,
As Angelo. Shakespeare.

The wretched cattiff, all alone,
As he believ'd, began to moan,
And tell his story to himself. Hudibras.

CAKE. n. f. [caeb, Teutonic.]

1. A kind of delicate bread.

You must be seeing christenings! do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals? Shaksp.
My cake is dough, but I'll in among 'em; rest,
Out of hope of all but my share of the feast.

The dismal day was come; the priests prepare
Their heaven'd cakes, and fillets for my hair. Dryden.

2. Any thing of a form rather flat than high; by which it is sometimes distinguished from a loaf.

There is a cake that groweth upon the side of a dead tree, that hath gotten no name, but it is large, and of a chestnut colour, and hard and pithy. Bacon's Natural History.

3. Concreted matter; coagulated matter.

Then when the fleecy skies new cloath the wood,
And cakes of rustling ice come rolling down the flood. Dryden.

To CAKE. v. n. [from the noun.] To harden, as dough in the oven.

This burning matter, as it sunk very leisurely,
had time to cake together, and form the bottom, which covers the mouth of that dreadful vault that lies underneath it. Addison on Italy.

This is that very Mab,
That plats the manes of horses in the night,
And caker the clods in foul sluttish hairs. Shak.
He smil'd the wound,
And wash'd away the strings and clotted blood,
That ca'd within. Addison.

CALABASH Tree.

It hath a flower consisting of one leaf, divided as the brain into several parts; from whose cup rises the point, in the hinder part of the flower; which afterwards becomes a fleshy fruit, having an hard shell. They rise to the height of twenty-five or thirty feet in the West Indies, where they grow naturally. The shells are used by the natives.

groes for cups, as also for making instruments of music, by making a hole in the shell, and putting in small stones, with which they make a sort of rattle. Miller.

CALAMACO. n. f. [a word derived, probably by some accident, from cala- manus, Lat. which, in the middle ages, signified a hat.] A kind of woollen stuff.

He was of a bulk and stature larger than ordinary, had a red coat, hung open, to show a cala- manco waistcoat. Tatler.

CALAMINE, or Lapis Calaminaris. n. f.
A kind of fossil bituminous earth, which,
being mixed with copper, changes it into brass.

We must not omit those, which, though not of so much beauty, yet are of greater use, viz.
loadstones, whetstones of all kinds, limstones, calamine, or lapis calaminaris. Locke.

CALAMINT. n. f. [calamintha, Lat.] A plant.

CALAMITOUS. adj. [calamitosus, Lat.]

1. Miserable; involved in distress; oppressed with infelicity; unhappy;
wretched: applied to men.

This is a gracious provision God Almighty hath made in favour of the necessitous and cala- mitous; the state of some, in this life, being so extremely wretched and deplorable, if compared with others. Calamy.

2. Full of misery; distressful: applied to external circumstances.

What calamitous effects the air of this city wrought upon us the last year, you may read in my discourse of the plague. Harvey.

Strict necessity
Subdues me, and calamitous constraint!
Left on my head both sin and punishment,
However insupportable, be all Devolv'd. Milton.

Much rather I shall chuse
To live the poorest in my tribe, than richest,
And be in that calamitous prison left. Milton.

In this sad and calamitous condition, deliverance from an oppressor would have even revived them. South.

CALAMITOUSNESS. n. f. [from calami- tous.] Misery; distress.

CALAMITY. n. f. [calamitas, Lat.]

1. Misfortune; cause of misery; distress.

Another ill accident is drought, and the withering of the corn, which with us is rare, but in hotter countries common; inasmuch as the word calamity was first derived from calamus, when the corn could not get out of the stalk. Isaac.

2. Misery; distress.

This infinite calamity shall cause
To human life, and household peace confound. Milton.

From adverse shores in safety let her hear
Foreign calamity, and distant war;
Of which, great heav'n, let her no portion bear. Prior.

CALAMUS. n. f. [Lat.] A sort of reed or sweet-scented wood, mentioned in scripture with the other ingredients of the sacred perfumes. It is a knotty root, reddish without, and white within, which puts forth long and narrow leaves, and brought from the Indies.
The prophets speak of it as a foreign commodity of great value. These sweet reeds have no smell when they are green, but when they are dry only. Their form differs not from other reeds, and their smell is perceived upon entering the marshes. Calmet.

Take thou also unto thee principal spices of pure myrror, of sweet cinnamon, and of sweet calamus. Exodus.

CALA'SH. n. f. [caleche, Fr.] A small carriage of pleasure.

Daniel, a sprightly swain, that us'd to dash
The vigorous steeds, that drew his lord's caleche. King.

The ancients used caleches, the figures of feveral of them being to be seen on ancient monuments. They are very simple, light, and drove by the traveller himself. Arbuthnot.

CALCEATED. adj. [calceatus, Lat.] Shod;
fitted with shoes.

CALCEDONIUS. n. f. [Lat.] A kind of precious stone.

Calcedonius is of the agate kind, and of a misty grey, clouded with blue, or with purple.
Woodward on Fossils.

To CALCINATE. See To CALCINE.

In hardening, by baking without melting, the heat hath these degrees; first, it indurates, then maketh fragile, and lastly it doth calcinat. Bacon.

CALCINATION. n. f. [from calcare; cal- cination, Fr.] Such a management of bodies by fire, as renders them reduc-ible to powder; wherefore it is called chymical pulverization. This is the next degree of the power of fire beyond that of fusion; for when fusion is longer continued, not only the more subtile particles of the body itself fly off, but the particles of fire likewise insinuate themselves in such multitudes, and are so blended through its whole substance, that the fluidity, first caused by the fire, can no longer subsist. From this union arises a third kind of body, which being very porous and brittle, is easily reduced to powder; for, the fire having penetrated every where into the pores of the body, the particles are both hindered from mutual contact, and divided into minute atoms. Quincy.

Divers residences of bodies are thrown away, as soon as the distillation or calcination of the body that yieldeth them is ended. Boyle.

This may be effected, but not without a cal- cination, or reducing it by art into a subtile powder. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CALCINATORY. n. f. [from calcinare.]
A vessel used in calcination.

To CALCINE. v. a. [calcinare, Fr. from calx, Lat.]

1. To burn in the fire to a calx, or friable substance. See CALCINATION.

The solids seem to be earth, bound together with some oil; for if a bone be calcined, so as the least force will crumble it, being immersed in oil, it will grow firm again. Arbuthnot.

2. To burn up.

Fiery disputes that union have calcined,
Almost as many minds as men we find. Denham.

To CALCINE. v. n. To become a calx by heat.

This chrysol is a pellucid fossil stone, clear as water, and without colour, enduring a red heat without losing its transparency, and in a very strong heat, calcining without fusion. Newton.

To CALCULATE. v. a. [calculus, Fr.
from calculus, Lat. a little stone or bead, used in operations of numbers.]

1. To compute; to reckon: as, he calcu- lates his expences.

2. To compute the situation of the planets at any certain time.

A cunning man did calculate my birth,
And told me, that by water I should die. Shaksp.

Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts,
Why old men, fools, and children calculate,
Why all those things change from their ordinance?
Shakspeare.

Who were there then in the world, to observe The births of those first men, and calculate their narivities, as they sprawled out of ditches?
Bentley.

3. To adjust; to project for any certain end.
The reasonableness of religion clearly appears,
as it tends so directly to the happiness of men, and is, upon all accounts, calculated for our benefit. Tillotson.

To CALCULATE. v. n. To make a computation.

CALCULATION. n. f. [from calculate.] A practice, or manner of reckoning; the art of numbering.

1. A practice, or manner of reckoning; the art of numbering.
Cypher, that great friend to calculation; or rather, which changeth calculation into easy computation. Holder on Time.

2. A reckoning; the result of arithmetical operation.

If then their calculation be true, for so they reckon. Hooker.

Being different from calculations of the ancients, their observations confirm not ours. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CALCULATOR. n. f. [from calculate.] A computer; a reckoner.

CALCULATORY. adj. [from calculate.] Belonging to calculation.

CALCULE. n. f. [calculus, Lat.] Reckoning; compute. Obsolete.

The general calculus, which was made in the last perambulation, exceeded eight millions. Huvel's Forest Forest.

CALCULOSE. adj. [from calculus, Lat.] Stony; gritty.

CALCULOUS. adj. Stony; gritty.

The volatile salt of urine will coagulate spirits of wine; and thus, perhaps, the stones, or calculus concretions in the kidney or bladder, may be produced. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

I have found, by opening the kidneys of a calculus person, that the stone is formed earlier than I have suggested. Sharp.

CALCULUS. n. f. [Lat.] The stone in the bladder.

CALDRON. n. f. [chauldron, Fr. from calidus, Lat.] A pot; a boiler; a kettle.

In the midst of all

There placed was a caldron wide and tall,

Upon a mighty furnace, burning hot. Fairy Q.

Some strip the skin; some portion out the spoil;

The limbs, yet trembling, in the caldrons boil;

Some on the fire the reeking entrails broil. Dryd.

In the late eruptions, this great hollow was like a vast caldron, filled with glowing and melted matter, which, as it boiled over in any part, ran down the sides of the mountain. Addison.

CALECHE. The same with calash.

CALEFACTION. n. f. [from calefacio, Lat.]

1. The act of heating any thing.
2. The state of being heated.

CALEFACTIVE. adj. [from calefacio, Lat.] That makes any thing hot; heating.

CALEFACTORY. Lat. That makes any thing hot; heating.

To CALEFY. v. n. [calify, Lat.] To grow hot; to be heated.

Crystal will calify unto electricity; that is, a power to attract flames, or light bodies, and convert the needle, freely placed. Brown.

To CALEFY. v. a. To make hot.

CALENDAR. n. f. [calendarium, Lat.] A register of the year, in which the months, and stated times, are marked, as festivals and holidays.

What hath this day deserv'd? what hath it done,

That it in golden letter should be set

Among the high tides, in the calendar? Shakspeare.

We compute from calendars differing from one another; the compute of the one anticipating that of the other. Brown.

Curs'd be the day when first I did appear;

Let it be blotted from the calendar,

Left it pollute the month! Dryden.

To CALENDER. v. a. [calendrer, Fr. Skinner.] To dress cloth; to lay the nap of cloth smooth.

CALENDER. n. f. [from the verb.] A hot press; a press in which clothiers smooth their cloth.

CALENDER. n. f. [from calender.] The person who calenders.

CALEND. n. f. [calende, Lat. It has no singular.] The first day of every month among the Romans.

CALENTURE. n. f. [from calco, Lat.] A distemper peculiar to sailors in hot climates; wherein they imagine the sea to be green fields, and will throw themselves into it. Quincy.

And for that lethargy was there no cure,

But to be call into a calenture. Denham.

So, by a calenture misled,

The mariner with rapture sees,

On the smooth ocean's azure bed,

Embell'd fields, and verdant trees:

With eager haste he longs to rove

In that fantastic scene, and thinks

It must be some enchanted grove;

And in he leaps, and down he sinks. Swift.

CALF. n. f. calves in the plural. [calv, Saxon; kalf, Dutch.]

1. The young of a cow.

The colt hath about four years of growth; and so the fawn, and so the calf. Bacon.

Acosta tells us of a fowl in Peru, called condore, which will kill and eat up a whole calf at a time. Wilkins.

Ah, Blouzelund! I love thee more by half

Than does their fawns, or cows the new-fall'n calf. Gay.

2. Calves of the lips, mentioned by Hosea, signify sacrifices of praise and prayers, which the captives of Babylon addressed to God, being no longer in a condition to offer sacrifices in his temple. Calmet.

Turn to the Lord, and say unto him, Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously: so will we render the calves of our lips. Hofea.

3. By way of contempt and reproach, applied to a human being, a dolt; a stupid wretch.

When a child haps to be got,

That after proves an idiot;

When folk perceive it thriveth not,

Some silly doating brainless calf,

That understand things by the half,

Says, that the fairy left the waf,

And took away the other. Drayton's Nym.

4. The thick, plump, bulbous part of the leg. [kalf, Dutch.]

Into her legs I'd have love's issues fall,

And all her calf into a gouty small. Suckling.

The calf of that leg blistered. Wifeman.

CALIBER. n. f. [calibre, Fr.] The bore; the diameter of the barrel of a gun; the diameter of a bullet.

CALICE. n. f. [calix, Lat.] A cup; a chalice.

There is a natural analogy between the ablation of the body and the purification of the soul; between eating the holy bread and drinking the sacred calice, and a participation of the body and blood of Christ. Taylor.

CA'LICO. n. f. [from Calicut in India.] An Indian stuff made of cotton; sometimes stained with gay and beautiful colours.

I wear the hoop petticoat, and am all in calicoes, when the novit are in silks. Addison.

CA'LD. adj. [calidus, Lat.] Hot; burning; fervent.

CALIDITY. n. f. [from calid.] Heat.

Ice will dissolve in any way or heat; for it will dissolve with fire, it will coagulate in water, or warm oil; nor doth it only submit into an actual heat, but not endure the potential calidity of many waters. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CA'LIP. n. f. [khalifa, Arab. an heir

CA'LIPH. n. f. [or successor.] A title assumed by the successors of Mahomet among the Saracens, who were vested with absolute power in affairs both religious and civil.

CALIGATION. n. f. [from caligo, Lat. to be dark.] Darknets; cloudiness.

Instead of a diminution, or imperfect vision, in the mole, we affirm an abolition, or total privation; instead of caligation, or dimness, we conclude a cecity, or blindness. Brown.

CALIGINOUS. adj. [caliginosus, Lat.] Obscure; dim; full of darknets.

CALIGINOUSNESS. n. f. [from caliginous.] Darknets; obscurity.

Why came not the slave back to me when I called him? Shakespeare's King Lear.

Are you call'd forth from out a world of men, To slay the innocent? Shakespeare's Richard III.

Lodronius, that famous captain, was called up, and told by his servants that the general was fled. Kneller's History.

Or call up him that left half told
The story of Cambuscan bold. Milton.

Drunkenness calls off the watchmen from their towers; and then evils proceed from a loose heart, and an untied tongue. Taylor's Holy Living.

The soul makes use of her memory, to call to mind what she is to treat of. Duppa.

Such fine employments our whole days divide;
The salutations of the morning tide
Call up the sun; these ended, to the hall
We wait the patron, hear the lawyers hawl. Dryd.

Then by consent abtain from further spoils,
Call off the dogs, and gather up the spoils. Addif.

By the pleasures of the imagination or fancy,
I mean such as arise from visible objects, when We call up their ideas into our minds by paintings, statues, or descriptions. Addifon.

Why dost thou call my sorrows up afresh,
My father's name brings tears into my eyes. Addifon.

I am called off from public dissertations, by a domestic affair of great importance. Tutler.

Aeschylus has a tragedy intitled Perseus, in which the shade of Darius is called up. Broom.

The passions call away the thoughts, with incessant importunity, toward the object that excited them. Watts.

3. To convoke; to summon together.
Now call us our high court of parliament. Shakespeare.

The king being informed of much that had passed that night, sent to the lord mayor to call a common council immediately. Clarendon.

4. To summon judicially.
The king had sent for the earl to return home, where he should be called to account for all his misdemeanours. Clarendon.

Once a day, especially in the early years of life and study, call yourselves to an account, what new ideas, what new proposition or truth, you have gained. Watts.

5. To summon by command.
In that day did the Lord God of hosts call to weeping, and to mourning, and to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth. Isaiah.

6. In the theological sense, to inspire with ardours of piety, or to summon into the church.
Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God. Romans.

7. To invoke; to appeal to.
I call God for a record upon my soul, that, to spare you, I came not as yet unto Corinth. 2 Cor.

8. To appeal to.
When that lord perplexed their councils and designs with inconvenient objections in law, the authority of the lord Manchester, who had trod
the same paths, was still called upon. Clarendon.

9. To proclaim; to publish.
Nor ballad-singer, plac'd above the crowd,
Sings with a note so thrilling, sweet, and loud,
Nor parish clerk, who calls the psalm so clear. Gay.

10. To excite; to put in action; to bring into view.
He swells with angry pride,
And calls forth all his spots on every side. Cowley.

See Dionysius Homer's thoughts refine,
And call new beauties forth from every line. Pope.

11. To stigmatize with some opprobrious denomination.

Deafness unqualifies men for all company, except friends; whom I can call names, if they do not speak loud enough. Swift to Pope.

12. To call back. To revoke; to retract.
He also is wise, and will bring evil, and will not call back his words; but will arise against the house of the evil doers; and against the help of them that work iniquity. Isaiah.

13. To call for. To demand; to require;
to claim.
Madam, his majesty doth call for you,
And for your grace, and you, my noble lord. Shakespeare.

You see how men of merit are sought after;
the undeserved may sleep, when the man of action is called for. Shakespeare.

Among them he a spirit of phœny sent,
Who hurt their minds,
And urg'd you on with mad desire,
To call in haste for their destroyer. Milton.

For master, or for servant, here to call,
Was all alike, where only two were all. Dryden.

He commits every sin that his appetite calls for,
or perhaps his constitution or fortune can bear. Rogers.

14. To call in. To resume money at interest.
Horace describes an old usurer, as so charmed with the pleasures of a country life, that, in order to make a purchase, he called in all his money; but what was the event of it? why, in a very few days after, he put it out again. Addif.

15. To call in. To resume any thing that is in other hands.
If clipped money be called in all at once, and stopped from passing by weight, I fear it will stop trade. Locke.

Neither is any thing more cruel and oppressive in the French government, than their practice of calling in their money, after they have sunk it very low, and then coining it anew, at a higher value. Swift.

16. To call in. To summon together; to invite.
The heat is past, follow no farther now;
Call in the pow'rs, good cousin Westmoreland. Shakespeare.

He fears my subjects loyalty,
And now must call in strangers. Denham.

17. To call over. To read aloud a list or muster-roll.

18. To call out. To challenge; to summon to fight.
When their lov'reign's quarrel calls 'em out,
His foes to mortal combat they defy. Dryden.

TO CALL. v. n.

1. To stop without intention of staying.
This meaning probably rose from the custom of denoting one's presence at the door by a call; but it is now used with great latitude. This sense is well enough preserved by the particles on or at; but is forgotten, and the expression made barbarous, by in.

2. To make a short visit.
And, as you go, call on my brother Quintus,
And pray him, with the tribunes, to come to me. Ben Jonson.

He ordered her to call at his house once a-week, which she did for some time after, when he heard no more of her. Temple.

That I might begin as near the fountain-head as possible, I first of all called in at St. James's. Addifon's Spectator.

We called in at Morge, where there is an artificial port. Addifon on Italy.

3. To call on. To solicit for a favour or a debt.
I would be loth to pay him before his day;
what need I be so forward with him, that calls
not on me? Shakespeare's Henry IV.

4. To call on. To repeat solemnly.
Thrice call upon my name, thrice beat your breast,
And hail me thrice to everlasting rest. Dryden.

The Athenians, when they lost any men at sea, went to the shores, and, calling thrice on their names, raised a cenotaph, or empty monument, to their memories. Broom on the Odyssey.

5. To call upon. To implore; to pray to.
Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me. Psalms.

CALL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A vocal address of summons or invitation.
But death comes not at call, justice divine Mends not her slowest pace for pray'rs or cries. Milton.

But would you sing, and rival Orpheus' strain,
The wond'ring forests soon should dance again:
The moving mountains here the powerful call,
And headlong streams hang list'ning in their fall. Pope.

2. Requisition authoritative and public.
It may be feared, whether our nobility would contentedly suffer themselves to be always at the call, and to stand to the sentence, of a number of mean persons. Hooker's Preface.

3. Divine vocation; summons to true religion.
Yet he at length, time to himself best known,
Remembering Abraham, by some wond'rous call,
May bring them back repentant and sincere. Milton.

4. A summons from heaven; an impulse.
How justly then will impious mortals fall,
Whose pride would soar to heav'n without a call. Reveries.

Those who to empire by dark paths aspire,
Still plead a call to what they most desire. Dryd.

St. Paul himself believed he did well, and that he had a call to it, when he persecuted the christians, whom he confidently thought in the wrong: but yet it was he, and not they, who were mistaken. Locke.

5. Authority; command.
Oh, sir! I wish he were within my call, or your. Denham.

6. A demand; a claim.
Dependence is a perpetual call upon humanity,
and a greater incitement to tenderness and pity,
than any other motive whatsoever. Addifon.

7. An instrument to call birds.
For those birds or beasts were made from such pipes or calls, as may express the several tones of those creatures, which are represented. Withins' Mathematical Magick.

8. Calling; vocation; employment.
Now through the land his cure of souls he stretch'd,
And like a primitive apostle preach'd:
Still cheerful, ever constant to his call;
By many follow'd, lov'd by most, admir'd by all. Dryden.

9. A nomination.
Upon the sixteenth was held the serjeants feast at Ely place, there being nine serjeants of that call. Bacon.

CALLAT. } n. f. A trull.

CALLET. }
He call'd her whore: a beggar, in his drink,
Could not have laid such terms upon his call. Shakespeare.

CALLING. n. f. [from call.]

1. Vocation; profession; trade.
If God has interwoven such a pleasure with our ordinary calling, how much superior must that be, which arises from the survey of a pious life? Surely, as much as christianity is nobler than a trade. South.

We find ourselves obliged to go on in honest industry in our calling. Rogers.

I cannot forbear warning you against endeavouring at wit in your sermons; because many of your calling have made themselves ridiculous
by attempting it. Swift.

I left no calling for this idle trade,
No duty broke, no father disobey'd. Pope.

2. Proper station, or employment.

The Gauls found the Roman senators ready to die with honour in their callings. Swift.

3. Class of persons united by the same employment or profession.

It may be a caution to all christian churches and magistrates, not to impose celibacy on whole callings, and great multitudes of men or women, who cannot be supposable to have the gift of con-tinence. Hammond.

4. Divine vocation; invitation or impulse to the true religion.

Give all diligence to make your calling and election sure. 2 Peter.

St. Peter was ignorant of the calling of the Gentiles. Haleswell on Providence.

CALLIPERS. n. f. [Of this word I know not the etymology; nor does any thing more probable occur, than that, perhaps, the word is corrupted from clippers, instruments with which any thing is clipped, enclosed, or embraced.] Compasses with bowed shanks.

Callipers measure the distance of any round, cylindrick, conical body; so that when workmen use them, they open the two points to their described width, and turn so much stuff of the intended place, till the two points of the callipers fit just over their work. Moxon.

CALLO'SITY. n. f. [callosité, Fr.] A kind of swelling without pain, like that of the skin by hard labour; and therefore when wounds, or the edges of ulcers, grow so, they are said to be callous.

Quincy.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet of his patient, as he finds the fibres loosen too much, are too flaccid, and produce funguses; or as they harden, and produce callosities; in the first case, wine and spirituous liquors are useful, in the last harmful. Arbuthnot on Diet.

CALLOUS. adj. [callus, Lat.]

1. Indurated; hardened; having the pores shut up.

In progress of time, the ulcers became sinuous and callous, with induration of the glands. Wijem.

2. Hardened in mind; insensible.

Licentiousness has so long passed for sharpness of wit, and greatness of mind, that the conscience is grown callous. L'Estrange

The wretch is drench'd too deep;
His soul is stupid, and his heart asleep:
Fatten'd in vice, so callous and so gross,
He sins, and sees not, senseless of his loss. Dryd.

CALLOUSNESS. n. f. [from callous.]

1. Hardness; induration of the fibres.

The oftener we use the organs of touching, the more of these scales are formed, and the skin becomes the thicker, and so a callousness grows upon it. Chrysar.

2. Insensibility.

If they let go their hope of everlasting life with willingness, and entertain final perdition with exultation, ought they not to be este-med destitute of common sense, and abandoned to a callousness and numbness of soul? Bentley.

CALLOW. adj. Unfledged; naked; without feathers.

Burbling with kindly rupture, forth disclos'd
Their callos young. Milton.

Then as an eagle, who with pious care
Was beating widely on the wing for prey,
To her now fitent airy does repair,
And finds her callos infants scur'd away. Dryd.

How in small sights they know to try their young,

And teach the callos child her parent's song. Prior.

CALLUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. An induration of the fibres.

2. The hard substance by which broken bones are united.

CALM. adj. [calme, Fr. kalm, Dutch.]

1. Quiet; serene; not stormy; not tempestuous: applied to the elements.

Calm was the day, and through the trembling
air

Sweet breathing Zephyrus did softly play

A gentle spirit, that lightly did allay

Hot Titan's beams, which then did glister fair. Spenser.

So shall the sea be calm unto us. Jonah.

2. Undisturbed; unruffled: applied to the passions.

It is no ways congruous, that God should be frightening men into truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence, and gentle methods of persuasion. Atterbury.

The queen her speech with calm attention hears,
Her eyes restrain the silver-streaming tears. Pope.

CALM. n. f.

1. Serenity; stillness; freedom from violent motion: used of the elements.

It seemeth most agreeable to reason, that the waters rather stood in a quiet calm, than that they moved with any raging or overbearing violence. Raleigh.

Every pilot

Can steer the ship in calm; but he performs
The skilful part, can manage it in storms. Denh.

Nor God alone in the still calm we find,
He mounts the storm, and walks upon the wind. Pope.

2. Freedom from disturbance; quiet; repose: applied to the passions.

Great and strange calms usually portend the most violent storms; and therefore, since storms and calms do always follow one another, certainly, of the two, it is much more eligible to have the storm first, and the calm afterwards:
since a calm before a storm is commonly a peace of a man's own making; but a calm after a storm, a peace of God's. South.

To CALM. v. s. [from the noun.]

1. To still; to quiet.

Neptune we find lufy, in the beginning of the Æneis, to calm the tempest raised by Æolus. Dryden.

2. To pacify; to appease.

Jesus, whose bare word checked the sea, as much exerts himself in silencing the tempests, and calming the intestine storms, within our breasts. Deenys of Pity.

Those passions, which seem somewhat calmed, may be entirely laid asleep, and never more awakened. Atterbury.

He will'd to stay,
The sacred rites and hecatombs to pay,
And calm Minerva's wrath. Pope.

CALMER. n. f. [from calm.] The person or thing which has the power of giving quiet.

Angling was, after tedious study, a rest to his mind, a cheerer of his spirits, a diverter of sadness, a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, a procurer of contentedness. Walton.

CALMLY. adv. [from calm.]

1. Without storms, or violence; serenely.

In nature, things move violently to their place, and calmly in their place; so virtue in ambition is violent, in authority settled and calm. Bacon.

His curled brows
From on the gentle stream, which calmly flows. Denham.

2. Without passions; quietly.

The nymph did like the scene appear,
Serenely pleasant, calmly fair;
Soft fell her words, as flew the air. Prior.

CALMNESS. n. f. [from calm.]

1. Tranquillity; serenity; not storminess.

While the steep horrid roughness of the woud
Strives with the gentle calmness of the flood. Denham.

2. Mildness; freedom from passion.

Sir, 'tis fit

You have strong party, or defend yourself
By calmness, or by abstinence: all's in anger. Shak.

I beg the grace,

You would lay by those terrors of your face;
Till calmness to your eyes you first restore,
I am afraid, and I can beg no more. Dryden.

CALMY. adj. [from calm.] Calm; peaceful. Not used.

And now they nigh approached to the sted,
Where as those mermaides dwelt: it was a still
And calmy bay, on one side sheltered
With the broad shadow of an hoary hill. Fairy Queen.

CALOMEL. n. f. [calomelas, a chymical word.] Mercury six times sublimed.

He repeated lenient purgatives, with calomel,
once in three or four days. Wijeman.

CALORIFICK. adj. [calorificus, Latin.]
That has the quality of producing heat; heating.

A calorifick principle is either excited within the heated body, or transferred to it, through any medium, from some other. Silver will grow hotter than the liquor it contains. Grew.

CALOTTE. n. f. [French.]

1. A cap or coif, worn as an ecclesiastical ornament in France.

2. [In architecture.] A round cavity or depression, in form of a cap or cup, lathed and plastered, used to diminish the rise or elevation of a chapel, cabinet, alcove, &c. Harris.

the Greek church.

Temperate as caloters in their secret cells.

Madden on Boulter.

CALTROPS. n. f. [coltreppe, Saxon.]

1. An instrument made with three spikes, so that which way soever it falls to the ground, one of them points upright, to wound horses feet.

The ground about wastick sown with caltrops, which very much incommoded the shoeless Moors. Dr. Addison's Account of Tangiers.

2. A plant common in France, Spain, and Italy, where it grows among corn, and is very troublesome; for the fruit being armed with strong prickles, run into the feet of the cattle. This is certainly the plant mentioned in Virgil's Georgick, under the name of tribulus. Miller.

To CALVE. v. n. [from calv.]

1. To bring a calf: spoken of a cow.

When she has calv'd, then set the dam aside,
And for the tender progeny provide. Dryden.

2. It is used metaphorically for any act of bringing forth; and sometimes of men,
by way of reproach.

I would they were barbarians, as they are,
Though in Rome litter'd; not Romans, as they are not,

Though calv'd in the porch o' th' capitol. Shaksp.

The grassy clods now calv'd; now half appear'd
The tawny lion, pawing to get free

His hinder parts. Milam.

CALVES-Snout. [antirrhinum.] A plant;

snapdragon.

CALVILLE. n. f. [French.] A sort of apple.

TO CALUMNIATE. v. n. [calumniar, Lat.] To accuse falsely; to charge without just ground.

Beauty, wit, high birth, desert in service, Love, friendship, charity, are subject all To envious and calumniating time. Shakespeare.

He mixes truth with falsehood, and has not forgotten the rule of calumniating strongly, that something may remain. Dryden's Fab. Pref.

Do I calumniate? thou ungrateful Vane! — Perfidious prince! — Is it a calumny To say that Gwendolen, betroth'd to Yver, Was by her father first assur'd to Valens? A. Philips.

TO CALUMNIATE. v. a. To slander.

One trade or art, even those that should be the most liberal, make it their business to slander and calumniate another. Spratt.

CALUMNIA'TION. n. f. [from calumniare.] That which we call calumination, is a malicious and false representation of an enemy's words or actions, to an offensive purpose. Ayliffe.

CALUMNIA'TOR. n. f. [from calumniare.] A forger of accusation; a slanderer.

He that would live clear of the envy and hatred of potent calumniators, must lay his finger upon his mouth, and keep his hand out of the ink-pot. L'Estrange.

At the same time that Virgil was celebrated by Gallus, we know that Bavius and Mævius were his declared foes and calumniators. Addison.

CALUMNIOUS. adj. [from calumny.] Sland'rous; falsely reproachful.

Virtue itself 'scapes not calumnious strokes. Shakespeare.

With calumnious art

Of counterfeited truth, thus held their ears. Milt.

CALUMNY. n. f. [calumnia, Lat.] Slander; false charge; groundless accusation: with against, or sometimes upon, before the person accused.

Be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow, Thou shalt not escape calumny. Shakespeare.

It is a very hard calumny upon our soil or climate, to affirm, that so excellent a fruit will not grow here. Temple.

CALX. n. f. [Latin.] Any thing that is rendered reducible to powder by burning.

Gold, that is more dense than lead, resists pre-emptorily all the dividing power of fire; and will not be reduced into a calx, or lime, by such operation as reduces lead into it. Digby.

CALYCLE. n. f. [calyculus, Lat.] A small bud of a plant. Dict.

CAMA'IEU. n. f. [from camachia; which name is given by the orientals to the onyx, when, in preparing it, they find another colour.]

1. A stone with various figures and representations of landkips, formed by nature.

2. [In painting.] A term used where there is only one colour, and where the lights and shadows are of gold, wrought on a golden or azure ground. This kind of work is chiefly used to represent basso relievo. Chambers.

CAMBER. n. f. [See CAMBERING.] A term among workmen.

Camber, a piece of timber cut arching, so as, a weight considerable being set upon it, it may in length of time be induced to a straight. Mason.

who say that a place is cambering, when they mean arched. [From chambred, Fr.]

CAMBRICK. n. f. [from Cambray, a city in Flanders, where it was principally made.] A kind of fine linen used for ruffles, women's sleeves, and caps.

He hath ribbons of all the colours of the rainbow; inkles, caddises, cambricks, and lawns. Shakespeare.

Rebecca had, by the use of a looking glass, and by the further use of certain attire, made of cambrick, upon her head, attained to an evil art. Totter.

Confed'rate in the cheat, they draw the throng, And cambrick handkerchiefs reward the song. Gay.

CAME. The preterit of To come.

Till all the pack came up, and ev'ry hound Tore the sad huntsman, growling on the ground. Goldsmith.

CAMEL. n. f. [camelus, Lat.] An animal very common in Arabia, Judea, and the neighbouring countries. One sort are large, and full of flesh, and fit to carry burdens of a thousand pounds weight, having one bunch upon their backs. Another have two bunches upon their backs, like a natural saddle, and are fit either for burdens, or men to ride on. A third kind are leaner, and of a smaller size, called dromedaries, because of their swiftness; which are generally used for riding by men of quality.

Camels have large solid feet, but not hard. Camels will continue ten or twelve days without eating or drinking, and keep water a long time in their stomach, for their refreshment. Calmes.

Patient of thirst and toil, Son of the desert! even the camel feels, Shot through his wither'd heart, the fierc' blast. Thomson.

CAME'LOARD. n. f. [from camelus and pardus, Lat.] An Abyssinian animal, taller than an elephant, but not so thick. He is so named, because he has a neck and head like a camel; he is spotted like a pard, but his spots are white upon a red ground. The Italians call him giaraffa. Trevoux.

CAMELOT. } n. f. [from camel.]

1. A kind of stuff originally made by a mixture of silk and camels hair; it is now made with wool and silk.

This habit was not of camels skin, nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camelot, grograin, or the like; inasmuch as these stuffs are supposed to be made of the hair of that animal. Brown's Vul. Er.

2. Hair cloth.

Meantime the pastor shears their hoary beards, And eases of their hair the laden herds: Their camels warm in tents the soldier hold, And shield the shiv'ring mariner from cold. Dryden.

CAMERA OBSCURA. [Latin.] An optical machine used in a darkened chamber, so that the light coming only through a double convex glass, objects exposed to daylight, and opposite to the glass, are represented inverted upon any white matter placed in the focus of the glass. Martin.

Those grateful groves that shade the plain,
Where Tiber rolls majestic to the main,
And laments, to be torn, the fair campagna. Garth.

2. The time for which any army keeps the field, without entering into quarters.

This might have hasted his march, which would have made a fair conclusion of the campaign. Clarendon.

An illud rising out of one campaign. Goldsmith.

CAMPANIFORM. adj. [of campana, a bell, and forma, Lat.] A term used of flowers, which are in the shape of a bell. Harri.

CAMPANULATE. adj. The same with campaniform.

CAMP'ESTRAL. adj. [campestris, Lat.] Growing in fields.

The mountain beech is the whitest; but the campestral, or wild beech, is blacker and more durable. Mortimer.

CAMP'PHIRE TREE. n. f. [camphora, Lat.]

There are two sorts of this tree; one is a native of the isle of Borneo, from which the best camphire is taken, which is supposed to be a natural exudation from the tree, produced in such places where the bark of the tree has been wounded or cut. The other sort is a native of Japan, which Dr. Kämpfer describes to be a kind of bay, bearing black or purple berries, and from whence the inhabitants prepare their camphire, by making a simple decoction of the root and wood of this tree, cut into small pieces; but this sort of camphire is, in value, eighty or an hundred times less than the true Bornean camphire. Miller.

It is oftener used for the gum of this tree.

CAMP'PHORATE. adj. [from camphora, Lat.]

Impregnated with camphire.

By shaking the saline and camphorate liquors together, we easily confounded them into one high-coloured liquor. Boyle.

CAMP'ION. n. f. [lychnis, Lat.] A plant.

CAM'US. n. f. [probably from camisa, Lat.] A thin dress mentioned by Spenser.

And was yclad, for heat of scorching air,
All in filken camus, lilly white,
Parted upon with many a folded plight. Fairy Q.

CAN. n. f. [canne, Sax.] A cup; generally a cup made of metal, or some other matter than earth.

I hate it as an unfill'd can. Shakspeare.

One tree, the cano, affordeth stuff for housing, clothing, shipping, meat, drink, and can. Grew.

His empty can, with ears half worn away,
Was hung on high, to boast the triumph of the day. Dryden.

To CAN. v. n. [kennen, Dutch.] It is sometimes, though rarely, used alone; but is in constant use as an expression of the potential mood: as, I can do, thou canst do, I could do, thou couldst do. It has no other terminations.]

1. To be able; to have power.

In place there is licence to do good and evil, whereof the latter is a curse: for, in evil, the best condition is not to will; the second, not to can. Bacon.

O, there's the wonder!

Mecenas and Agrippa, who can most With Cæsar, are his foes. Dryden.

He can away with no company, whose discourse goes beyond what claret and dissoluteness inspires. Locke.

2. It expresses the potential mood; as, I can do it.

If the can make me blest! the only can:
Empire and wealth, and all she brings beside,
Are but the train and trappings of her love. Dryd.

3. It is distinguished from may, as power from permission; I can do it, it is in my power; I may do it, it is allowed me; but in poetry they are confounded.

4. Can is used of the person with the verb active, where may is used of the thing, with the verb passive; as, I can do it, it may or can be done.

CANAILLE. n. f. [French.] The lowest people; the dregs; the lees; the offscouring of the people: a French term of reproach.

CANA'RY. n. f. [from the Canary islands.]

1. Wine brought from the Canaries, now called fack.

I will to my honest knight Falstaff, and drink canary with him.—I think I shall drink in pipe wine first with him; I'll make him dance. Shakspeare.

2. An old dance.

To CANA'RY. v. a. A cant word, which seems to signify to dance; to frolick.

Master, will you win your love with a French brawl?—How mean'st thou, bawling in French?—No, my compleat master; but to jigg off a tune at the tongue's end, canary to it with your feet, humour it with turning up your eyelids. Shakspeare.

CANA'RY BIRD. An excellent singing bird, formerly bred in the Canaries, and nowhere else; but now bred in several parts of Europe, particularly Germany.

Of singing birds, they have linnets, goldfinches, ruddocks, canary birds, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers other. Carew.

To CAN'CEL. v. a. [cancell, Fr. from cancellis notare, to mark with cross lines.]

1. To cross a writing.

2. To efface; to obliterate in general.

Now welcome night, though night so long expected,

That long day's labour doth at last defray,
And all my cares which cruel love collected
Has sum'm'd in one, and cancelled for aye. Spens.

Know then, I here forget all summer griefs,
Cancel all grudge; repeal the home again. Shaks.

Thou, whom avenging powers obey,
Cancel my debt, too great to pay,
Before the sad accounting day. Roscommon.

I pass the bills, my lords,
For cancelling your debts. Southerne.

Short is the doubtful empire of the night. Thomf.

3. A virulent swelling, or sore, not to be cured.

Any of these three may degenerate into a schirrus, and that schirrus into a cancer. Wifeman.

As when a cancer on the body feeds,
And gradual death from limb to limb proceeds;
So does the caniness to each vital part Spread by degrees, and creeps into the heart. Addison.

To CAN'CERATE. v. n. [from cancer.]

To grow cancerous; to become a cancer.

But striking his fist upon the point of a nail in the wall, his hand cancerated, he fell into a fever, and soon after died on't. L'Estrange.

CANCERATION. n. f. [from cancerate.]

A growing cancerous.

CAN'CEROUS. adj. [from cancer.] Having the virulence and qualities of a cancer.

How they are to be treated when they are

The state of being cancerous.

CAN'CRINE. adj. [from cancer.] Having the qualities of a crab.

CAN'DENT. adj. [candens, Lat.] Hot; in the highest degree of heat, next to fusion.

If a wire be heated only at one end, according as that end is cooled upward or downward, it respectively acquires a verticity, as we have declared in wires totally candent. Brown.

CAN'DICANT. adj. [candicans, Latin.]

Growing white; whitish. DiD.

CAN'DID. adj. [candidus, Lat.]

1. White. This sense is very rare.

The box receives all black; but pour'd from thence,

The stones came candid forth, the hue of innocence. Dryden.

2. Free from malice; not desirous to find faults; fair; open; ingenuous.

The import of the discourse will, for the most part, if there be no designed fallacy, sufficiently lead candid and intelligent readers into the true meaning of it. Locke.

A candid judge will read each piece of wit
With the same spirit that its author writ. Pope.

CAN'DIDATE. n. f. [candidatus, Lat.]

1. A competitor; one that solicits, or proposes himself for, something of advancement.

So many candidates there stand for wit,
A place at court is scarce to hard to get. Anonymus.

One would be surpris'd to see so many candi- dates for glory. Addison.

2. It has generally for before the thing sought.

What could thus high thy rash ambition raise?
Art thou, fond youth, a candidate for praise? Pope.

3. Sometimes of.

Thy first-fruits of poetry were giv'n
To make thyself a welcome inmate there,
While yet a young probationer,
And candidate of heav'n. Dryden.

CAN'DIDLY. adv. [from candid.] Fairly; without trick; without malice; ingenuously.

We have often desired they would deal candidly with us; for if the matter stuck only there, we would suppose that every man should swear, that he is a member of the church of Ireland. Swift.

CAN'DIDNESS. n. f. [from candid.] Ingenuity; openness of temper; purity of mind.

It presently sees the guilt of a sinful action;
and, on the other side, observes the candidness of a man's very principles, and the sincerity of his intentions. South.

CAN'DLE. n. f. [candela, Lat.]

1. A light made of wax or tallow, surrounding a wick of flax or cotton.

Here burns my candle out, ay, here it dies,
Which, while it lasted, gave king Henry light.
Shakespeare.
We see that wax candles last longer than tallow candles, because wax is more firm and hard.

Bacon's Natural History.
Take a child, and setting a candle before him,
you shall find his pupil to contract very much,
to exclude the light, with the brightness whereof it would otherwise be dazzled. Ray.

2. Light, or luminary.

By these blest'd candles of the night,
Had you been there, I think you would have begg'd

The ring of me, to give the worthy doctor. Shak.
CANDLEBERRY TREE. A species of sweetwillow.

CANDLEHOLDER. n. f. [from candle and hold.]

1. He that holds the candle.

2. He that remotely assists.

Let wantons, light of heart,
Tickle the senseless rushes with her heels;
For I am proverb'd with a grandfire phrase,
To be a candleholder, and look on. Shakespeare.

CANDLELIGHT. n. f. [from candle and
light.]

1. The light of a candle.

In darkness candlelight may serve to guide men's steps, which to use in the day, were madness. Hooker.

Before the day was done, her work she sped,
And never went by candlelight to bed. Dryden.

The hoding owl
Steals from her private cell by night,
And flies about the candlelight. Swift.

Such as are adapted to meals, will indifferently serve for dinners or suppers, only distinguishing between daylight and candlelight. Swift.

2. The necessary candles for use.

I shall find him coals and candlelight
Molineux to Locke.

CANDLEMAS. n. f. [from candle and mas.] The feast of the Purification of the Blessed Virgin, which was formerly celebrated with many lights in churches.

The harvest dinners are held by every wealthy man, or, as we term it, by every good liver, between Michaelmas and Candlemas.

Carver's Survey of Cornwall.
There is a general tradition in most parts of Europe, that interred the cold is of the succeeding winter, upon shining of the sun upon Candlemas day. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Come Candlemas nine years ago she died,
And now lies bury'd by the yew-tree side. Gay.

CANDLESTICK. n. f. [from candle and stick.] The instrument that holds candles.

The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-flaves in their hands; and their poor
jades

Lob down their heads. Shakespeare.

These countries were once christian, and members of the church, and where the golden candle- sticks did stand. Bacon.

I know a friend, who has converted the essays of a man of quality into a kind of fringe for his candlesticks. Addison.

CANDLESTUFF. n. f. [from candle and stuff.] Any thing of which candles may be made; kitchenstuff; grease; tallow.

By the help of oil, and wax, and other candle- stuff, the flame may continue, and the wick not burn. Bacon.

CANDLEWASTER. n. f. [from candle and waste.] One that consumes candles; a spendthrift.

Patch grief with proverbs, make misfortune drunk

With candlewasters. Shakespeare.

CANDOCK. n. f. A weed that grows in rivers.

Let the pond lie dry six or twelve months, both to kill the water weeds, as water-lilies, candocks, reeds, and bulrushes; and also, that as these die for want of water, to grass may grow on the pond's bottom. Walton.

CANDOUR. n. f. [candor, Lat.] Sweetness of temper; purity of mind; openness; ingenuity; kindness.

He should have so much of a natural candour and sweetness, mixed with all the improvement of learning, as might convey knowledge with a sort of gentle insinuation. Watts.

TO CANDY. v. n. [probably from candare,
a word used in later times for coburn.]

1. To confere with sugar, in such a manner as that the sugar lies in flakes, or breaks into spangles.

Should the poor be flatter'd?
No, let the candy'd tongue lick absurd pomp,
And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee,
Where thrift may follow fawning. Shakespeare.

They have in Turkey confections like to candied conferes, made of sugar and lemons, or sugar and citrons, or sugar and violets, and some other flowers, and mixture of amber. Bacon.

With candy'd plantains, and the juicy pine,
On choicest melons and sweet grapes they dine.
Waller.

2. To form into congelations.

Will the cold brook,
Candied with ice, candle thy morning toast,
To cure thy o'er-night's surfeit? Shakespeare.

3. To inerust with congelations.

Since when those fruits that winter brings,
Which candy every green,
Renew us like the teeming springs,
And we thus fresh are seen. Dryden.

TO CANDY. v. n. To grow congealed.

CANDY Lion's foot. [catanance, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

CANE. n. f. [canna, Lat.]

1. A kind of strong reed, of which walk- ingstaves are made; a walkingstaff.

Shall I to please another wine sprung mind Lose all mine own? God hath given me a recourse

Short of his cane and body: must I find
A pain in that wherein he finds a pleasure?
Herbert.

The king thrust the captain from him with his cane; whereupon he took his leave, and went home. Harvey.

If the poker be out of the way, or broken,
Sit the fire with your master's cane. Swift.

2. The plant which yields the sugar.

This cane or reed grows plentifully both in the East and West Indies. Other reeds have their skin hard and dry, and their pulp void of juice; but the skin of the sugar cane is soft. It usually grows four or five feet high, and about half an inch in diameter. The stem or stalk is divided by knots a foot and a half apart. At the top it puts forth long green tufted leaves, from the middle of which arise the flower and the seed.
They usually plant them in pieces cut a foot and a half below the top of the flower; and they are ordinarily ripe in ten months, at which time they are found quite full of a white succulent marrow, whence is expressed the liquor of which sugar is made. Chambers.

And the sweet liquor on the cane below,
From which prepar'd the luscious sugars flow.
Blackmore.

3. A lance; a dart made of cane: whence the Spanish inigo de cannas.

Abenamar, thy youth these sports has known,
Of which thy age is now spectator grown;
Judge-like thou sit'st, to praise or to disdain
• The flying skirmish of the darted cane. Dryden.

4. A reed.

Food may be afforded to bees, by small canes or troughs conveyed into their lives. Mortimer.

TO CANE. v. n. [from the noun.] To beat with a walkingstaff.

CANICULAR. adj. [canicularis, Lat.]

Belonging to the dogstar.

In regard to different latitudes, unto some the canicular days are in the winter, as unto such as are under the equinoctial line; for unto them the dog star riseth, when the sun is about the tropic of Cancer, which season unto them is winter.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CANINE. adj. [caninus, Lat.]

1. Having the properties of a dog.

A kind of women are made up of canine particles: these are scolds, who imitate the animals out of which they were taken, always budy and barking, and snarl at every one that comes in their way. Addison.

2. Canine hunger, in medicine, is an ap- petite which cannot be satisfied.

It may occasion an exorbitant appetite of usual things, which they will take in such quantities, till they vomit them up like dogs, from whence it is called canine. Arbuthnot.

CANISTER. n. f. [canistrum, Lat.]

1. A small basket.

White lilies in full canisters they bring,
With all the glories of the purple spring. Dryden.

2. A small vessel in which any thing, such as tea or coffee, is laid up.

CANKER. n. f. [cancer, Lat.] It seems to have the same meaning and original with cancer, but to be accidentally written with a k, when it denotes bad qualities in a less degree; or canker might come from chancres, Fr. and cancer from the Latin.]

1. A worm that preys upon and destroys fruits.

And loathful idleness he doth detest,
The canker worm of every gentle breast. Spenser.
That which the locust hath left, hath the canker worm eaten. Jul.

Yet writers say, as in the sweetest bud
The eating canker dwells; so eating love
Inhabits in the finest wits of all. Shakespeare.

A huffing, flaming, flut'ring, cringing coward,
A canker worm of peace, was rais'd above him.
Urquay.

2. A fly that preys upon fruits.

There be of flies, caterpillars, canker flies, and bear flies. Walton's Angler.

3. Any thing that corrupts or consumes.

It is the canker and ruin of many men's estates, which, in process of time, breeds a publick poverty. Bacon.

Sacrilege may prove an eating canker, and a consuming moth, in the estate that we leave them.
Atterbury.

No longer live the canckers of my court;
All to your several states with speed resort;
Waste in wild not what your land allows,
There ply the early feast, and late carouse.
Pope.

4. A kind of wild worthless rose; the dog- rose.

To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose,
And plant this thorn, this canker, Bolingbroke.

Draw a cherry with the leaf, the shaft of a spear, a single or canker rose. Penckman.

5. An eating or corroding humour.

I am not glad, that such a sore of time
Should seek a plaister by a contem'd revolt,
And heal th' inveterate canker of one wound
By making many. Shakespeare.

6. Corrosion; virulence.

As with age his body uglier grows,
So his mind with canckers. Shakespeare.

7. A disease in trees.

TO CANKER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To grow corrupt; implying something venomous and malignant.

That cunning architect of canker'd guile,
Whom princes late displeasure left in hands,
For fals'd letters, and suborn'd wile. Fairy Q.
I will lift the down-trod Mortimer
As high as th' air as this unthankful king,
As this ingrate and canker'd Bolingbroke. Shak.
Or what the cross dire looking planet smite,
Or hurtful worm with canker'd venom bite. Milton.

To some new clime, or to thy native sky,
Oh friendless and forsaken virtue! fly:
The Indian air is deadly to thee grown;
Deceit and canker'd malice rule thy throne. Dryden.

Let envious jealousy and canker'd spite
Produce my actions to severest light,
And tax my open day or secret night. Prior.

2. To decay by some correlative or destructive principle.

Silvering will fully and canker more than gilding;
which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, will be profitable. Bacon.

To CANKER. v. a.

3. To corrupt; to corrode.

Rebore to God his due in tithe and time:
A tithe purloin'd cankers the whole estate. Herbert.

2. To infect; to pollute.

An honest man will enjoy himself better in a moderate fortune, that is gained with honour and reputation, than in an overgrown estate, that is cankered with the acquisitions of rapine and exaction. Addison.

CANKER-BIT. particip. adj. [from canker and bit.] Bitten with an envenomed tooth.

Know, thy name is lost,
By treason's tooth baregawn and canker-bit. Shakespeare.

CANNABINE. adj. [cannabinus, Lat.] Hempen. DiD.

CANNIBAL. n. f. An anthropophagite; a man-eater.

The cannibals themselves eat no man's flesh of those that die of themselves, but of such as are slain. Bacon.

They were little better than cannibals, who do hunt one another: and he that hath most strength and swiftness, doth eat and devour all his fellows. Darwin on Ireland.

It was my hint to speak
Of the cannibals that each other eat;
The anthropophagi. Shakespeare.

The captive cannibal, oppress'd with chains,
Yet braves his foes, reviles, provokes, disdains;
Of nature fierce, untameable, and proud,
He bids defiance to the gaping crowd;
And spent at last, and speechless, as he lies,
With fiery glances mocks their rage, and dies. Granville.

If an eleventh commandment had been given,
Thou shalt not eat human flesh; would not these cannibals have esteemed it more difficult than all the rest? Bentley.

CANNIBALLY. adv. [from cannibal.] In the manner of a cannibal.

Before Coriolanus, he scotch'd him and notch'd him like a corbionado.

—Had he been cannibally given, he might have broiled and eaten him too. Shakespeare.

CANNIPERS. n. f. [corrupted from calipers; which see.]

The square is taken by a pair of cannipers, or two rulers, clapped to the side of a tree, measuring the distance between them. Mortimer.

CANNON. n. f. [cannon, Fr. from canna, Lat. a pipe, meaning a large tube.]

1. A great gun for battery.
2. A gun larger than can be managed by the hand. They are of so many sizes, that they decrease in the bore from a ball of forty-eight pounds to a ball of five ounces.

As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks,
So they redoubled strokes upon the foe. Shaksp.
He had left all the cannon he had taken; and now he sent all his great cannon to a garrison. Clarendon.

The making, or price, of these gunpowder instruments, is extremely expensive, as may be easily judged by the weight of their materials; a whole cannon weighing commonly eight thousand pounds; a half cannon, five thousand; a culverin, four thousand five hundred; a demi-culverin, three thousand; which, whether it be in iron or brass, must needs be very costly. Wilkins.

CANNON-BALL. n. f. [from cannon, CANNON-BULLET. n. f. [ball, bullet, and CANNON-SHOT. n. f. [shot.] The balls which are shot from great guns.

He reckons those for wounds that are made by bullets, although it be a cannon-shot. Wifeman.

Let a cannon-bullet pass through a room, it must strike successively the two sides of the room. Locke.

To CANNONADE. v. n. [from cannon.]

To play the great guns; to batter or attack with great guns.

Both armies cannonaded all the ensuing day. Tatler.

To CANNONADE. v. a. To fire upon with cannon.

CANNONIER. n. f. [from cannon.] The engineer that manages the cannon.

Give me the cups;
And let the kettle to the trumpets speak,
The trumpets to the cannonier without,
The cannons to the heav'ns, the heav'ns to earth. Shakespeare.

A third was a most excellent cannonier, whose good skill did much endamage the forces of the king. Hayward.

CANNOT. A word compounded of can and not: noting inability.

I cannot but believe many a child can tell twenty, long before he has any idea of infinity at all. Locke.

CANOA. n. f. A boat made by cutting CANOE. n. f. the trunk of a tree into a hollow vessel.

Others made rafts of wood; others devised the boat of one tree, called the cassa, which the Gauls upon the Rhine used in affitting the transportation of Hannibal's army. Raleigh.

In a war against Semiramis, they had four thousand monoxyla, or cassas, of one piece of timber. Arbuthnot on Coins.

CANON. n. f. [cánon.]

1. A rule; a law.

The truth is, they are rules and canons of that law, which is written in all men's hearts; the church had for ever, no less than now, stood bound to observe them, whether the apostle had mentioned them, or no. Hooker.

His books are almost the very canon to judge both doctrine and discipline by. Hooker.

Religious canons, civil laws, are cruel;
Then what should war be? Shakespeare.

Canons in logic are such as these: every part of a division, singly taken, must contain less than the whole; and a definition must be peculiar and proper to the thing defined. Watts.

2. The laws made by ecclesiastical councils.

Canon law is that law which is made and ordained in a general council, or provincial synod, of the church. Ayliffe.

These were looked on as lapsed persons, and great severities of penance were prescribed them by the canons of Ancyra. Stillingfleet.

3. The books of Holy Scripture; or the great rule.

Canon also denotes those books of Scripture, which are received as inspired and canonical, to distinguish them from either profane, apocryphal, or disputed books. Thus we say, that Genesis is part of the sacred canon of the Scripture. Ayliffe.

4. A dignitary in cathedral churches.

For deans and canons, or prebends, of cathedral churches, they were of great use in the church; they were to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, and for his government, in causes ecclesiastical. Bacon.

Swift much admires the place and air,
And longs to be a canon there.

A canon! that's a place too mean;
No, doctor, you shall be a dean;

Two dozen canons round your stall,
And you the tyrant o'er them all. Swift.

5. Canons Regular. Such as are placed in monasteries. Ayliffe.

6. Canons Secular. Lay canons, who have been, as a mark of honour, admitted into some chapters.

7. [Among chirurgeons.] An instrument used in sewing up wounds. DiD.

8. A large sort of printing letter, probably so called from being first used in printing a book of canons; or perhaps from its size, and therefore properly written canon.

CANON-BIT. n. f. That part of the bit let into the horse's mouth.

A goodly person, and could manage fair
His stubborn steed with canon-bit,
Who under him did trample as the air. Spenser.

CANONESSE. n. f. [canonissa, low Lat.]

These are, in popish countries, women they call secular canonesse, living after the example of secular canons. Ayliffe.

CANONICAL. adj. [canonicus, low Lat.]

1. According to the canon.

2. Constituting the canon.

Public readings there are of books and writings, not canonical, whereby the church doth also preach, or openly make known, the doctrine of virtuous conversation. Hooker.

No such book was found amongst those canonical scriptures. Raleigh.

3. Regular; stated; fixed by ecclesiastical laws.

Seven times in a day do I praise thee, said David: from this definite number some ages of the church took their pattern for their canonical hours. Taylor.

4. Spiritual; ecclesiastical; relating to the church.

York anciently had a metropolitan jurisdiction over all the bishops of Scotland, from whom they had their consecration, and to whom they swore canonical obedience. Ayliffe.

CANONICALLY. adv. [from canonical.]

In a manner agreeable to the canon.

It is a known story of the friar, who, on a fasting day, had his capon be carp, and then very canonically eat it. Government of the Tongue.

CANONICALNESS. n. f. [from canonical.]

The quality of being canonical.

CA'NONIST. n. f. [from canon.] A man versed in the ecclesiastical laws; a professor of the canon law.

John Fisher, bishop of Rochester, when the king would have translated him from that poor bishoprick, he refused, saying, he would not forsake his poor little old wife; thinking of the fiftenth canon of the Nicene council, and that of the canonists, Matrimonium inter episcopum & ecclesiam esse contractum, &c. Camden's Remains.

Of whose strange crimes no canon can tell
In what commandment's large contents they dwell. Pope.

CANONIZATION. n. f. [from canonize.]

The act of declaring any man a saint.
It is very suspicious, that the interests of particular families, or churches, have too great a sway in canonizations. Addison.

TO CANONIZE. v. a. [from canon, to put into the canon, or rule for observing festivals.] To declare any man a saint.

The king, desirous to bring into the house of Lancaster celestial honour, became suitor to pope Julius, to canonize king Henry vi. for a saint.

Bacon.

By those hymns all shall approve
Us canoniz'd for love.

Donne.

They have a pope too, who hath the chief care
Of religion, and of canonizing whom he thinks fit, and thence have the honour of saints.

Stillingfleet.

CANONRY. } n. f. [from canon.] An CANONSHIP. } ecclesiastical benefice in some cathedral or collegiate church, which has a prebend, or a stated allowance out of the revenues of such church, commonly annexed to it.

Ayliffe.

CANOPIED. adj. [from canopy.] Covered with a canopy.

I sat me down to watch upon a bank,
With ivy canopy'd, and interwove
With flaunting honey-suckle.

Milton.

CANOPY. n. f. [canopeum, low Lat.]
A covering of state over a throne or bed; a covering spread over the head.

She is there brought unto a paled green,
And placed under a stately canopy,
The warlike feats of both those knights to see.

Fairy Queen.

Now spread the night her spangled canopy,
And summon'd every restless eye to sleep.

Fairfax.

Nor will the raging fever's fire abate
With golden canopies, and beds of state.

Dryden.

TO CANOPY. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a canopy.

The birch, the myrtle, and the bay,
Like friends did all embrace;

And their large branches did display
To canopy the place.

Dryden.

CANOROUS. adj. [canorus, Lat.] Musical; tuneful.

Birds that are most canorous, and whose notes we most commend, are of little throat, and short.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CANT. n. f. [probably from cantus, Lat.
implying the odd tone of voice used by vagrants; but imagined by some to be corrupted from quant.]

1. A corrupt dialect used by beggars and vagrabonds.

2. A particular form of speaking, peculiar to some certain class or body of men.

I write not always in the proper terms of navigation, land service, or in the cant of any profession.

Dryden.

If we would trace out the original of that flagrant and avowed impiety, which has prevailed among us for some years, we should find, that it owes its rise to that cant and hypocrisy, which had taken possession of the people's minds in the times of the great rebellion. Addison's Freeholder.

Astrologers, with an old paitry cant, and a few pot-hooks for planets, to amuse the vulgar, have too long been suffer'd to abuse the world.

Swift's Predictions for the Year 1701.

A few general rules, with a certain cant of words, has sometimes set up an illiterate heavy writer for a most judicious and formidable crit-ick.

Addison's Spectator.

3. A whining pretension to goodness, in formal and affected terms.

Of promise prodigal, while pow'r you want,
And preaching in the self-denying cant.

Dryden.

4. Barbarous jargon.

The affectation of some late authors, to introduce and multiply cant words, is the most ruinous corruption in any language.

Swift.

5. Auction.

VOL. I.

Numbers of these tenants, or their descendants, are now offering to sell their leases by cant, even those which were for lives.

Swift.

TO CANT. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk in the jargon of particular professions; or in any kind of formal affected language; or with a peculiar and studied tone of voice.

Men cant about materia and forma; hunt chimeras by rules of art, or dress up ignorance in words of bulk or sound, which may stop up the mouth of enquiry.

Glaucilla.

That uncouth affected garb of speech, or canting language rather, if I may so call it, which they have of late taken up, is the signal distinction and characteristic note of that, which,
in that their new language, they call the godly party.

Samuelson.

The huffy, subtle serpents of the law
Did first my mind from true obedience draw;
While I did limits to the king prescribe,
And took for oracle that canting tribe.

Rescum.

Unkill'd in schemes by planets to foreshow,
Like canting vaseals, how the wars will go.

Dryd.

CANTATA. n. f. [Ital.] A song.

CANTATION. n. f. [from canto, Lat.]

The act of singing.

CANTER. n. f. [from cant.] A term of reproach for hypocrites, who talk formally of religion, without obeying it.

CANTERBURY BELLS. See BELFLOWER.

CANTERBURY GALLOP. [In horsemanship.]
The hand gallop of an ambling horse, commonly called a canter; said to be derived from the monks riding to Canterbury on easy ambling horses.

CANTHARIDES. n. f. [Latin.] Spanish flies, used to raise blisters.

The flies, cantharides, are bred of a worm, or caterpillar, but peculiar to certain fruit trees; as are the fig-tree, the pine-tree, and the wild briar; all which bear sweet fruit, and fruit that hath a kind of secret biting or sharpness: for the fig hath a milk in it that is sweet and corrosive; the pine apple hath a kernel that is strong and ab-sorbive.

Bacon's Natural History.

CANTHUS. n. f. [Latin.] The corner of the eye. The internal is called the greater, the external the lesser canthus.

Quincy.

A gentlewoman was seized with an inflammation and tumour in the great canthus, or angle of her eye.

Wigman.

CANTICLE. n. f. [from canto, Lat.] A song: used generally for a song in scripture.

This right of estate, in some nations, is yet more significantly expressed by Moses in his canticles, in the person of God to the Jews.

Bacon's Holy War.

CANTILIVERS. n. f. Pieces of wood framed into the front or other sides of a house, to sustain the moulding and eaves over it. Moxon's Mech. Exercises.

CANTION. n. f. [cantio, Lat.] Song;
verses. Not now in use.

In the eighth eclogue the same person was brought in singing a cantion of Colbin's making.

Spens. Kal. Glo.

CANTLE. n. f. [kant, Dutch, a corner; eschantillon, Fr. a piece.] A piece with corners.

Skinner.

See now this river comes, me cranking in,
And cuts me from the best of all my land
A huge half-moon, a monstrous cantle out.

Shak.

TO CANTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in pieces.

For four times talking, if one piece thou take,
That must be cantled, and the judge go back.

Dryden's Juvenal.

CANTLET. n. f. [from cantle.] A piece;
a fragment.

Not shield nor armour can their force oppose;
Huge cantlets of his buckler srew the ground,
And no defence in his bot'd arms is found.

Dand.

CANTO. n. f. [Ital.] A book or section, of a poem.

Why, what would you do —

— Make a willow cabin at your gate,
And call upon my soul within the house;
Write loyal cantos of continued love.

Shallsp.

CANTON. n. f.

1. A small parcel or division of land.

Only that little canton of land, called the English pale, containing four small thires, did maintain a bordering war with the Irish, and retain the form of English government.

Davies.

2. A small community, or clan.

The same is the case of rovers by land; such,
as yet, are some cantons in Arabia, and some petty kings of the mountains adjacent to Straits and ways.

Bacon's Holy War.

TO CANTON. v. a. [from the noun.] To divide into little parts.

Families shall quit all subjection to him, and canton his empire into less governments for themselves.

Locke.

It would certainly be for the good of mankind, to have all the mighty empires and monarchies of the world cantoned out into petty states and principalities.

Addison on Italy.

The late king of Spain, reckoning it an indignity to have his territories cantoned out into parcels by other princes, during his own life, and without his consent, rather chose to bequeath the monarchy entire to a younger son of France.

Swift.

They canton out to themselves a little province in the intellectual world, where they fancy the light shines, and all the rest is in darkness.

Watts.

TO CANTONIZE. v. a. [from canton.] To parcel out into small divisions.

Thus was all Ireland cantonized among ten persons of the English nation. Davies on Ireland.

The whole forest was in a manner cantonized amongst a very few in number, of whom some had regal rights.

Hensel.

CANTRED. n. f. The same in Wales as a hundred in England. For cantre, in the British language, signifieth a hundred.

Corwell.

The king regrants to him all that province, reserving only the city of Dublin, and the cantreds next adjoining, with the maritime towns.

Davies.

CANVASS. n. f. [canvas, Fr. cannalis,
Lat. hemp.]

1. A kind of linen cloth woven for several uses, as sails, painting cloths, tents.

The matter commanded forthwith to set on all the canvasses they could, and fly homeward.

Sidney.

And eke the pens, that did his pinions bind,
Were like main yards with flying canvass lin'd.

Spenser.

Their canvass castles up they quickly rear,
And build a city in an hour's space.

Fairfax.

Where'er thy navy spreads her canvass wings,
Homage to thee, and peace to all, the things.

Waller.

With such kind passion hastes the prince to fight,
And spreads his flying canvass to the sound;

Him whom no danger, were he there, could fright,

Now absent, every little noise can wound.

Dryd.

Thou, Kneller, long with noble pride,
The foremost of thy art, hast vied
With nature in a generous thirst,

And touch'd the canvass into life.

Add n.

2. The act of sifting voices, or trying them previously to the decisive act of voting. [from canvass, as it signifies a sieve.]

There be that can pack cards, and yet cannot play well: so there are some that are good in cannasses and fastious, that are otherwise weak men. Bacon.
TO CANVASS. v. a. [Skinner derives it from cannabuffer, Fr. to beat hemp; which being a very laborious employment, it is used to signify, to search diligently into.]

1. To sift; to examine. [from canvass, a straining cloth.]

I have made careful search on all hands, and canvassed the matter with all possible diligence. Woodward.

2. To debate; to discuss.

The curs discovered a raw hide in the bottom of a river, and laid their heads together how to come at it: they canvassed the matter one way and t'other, and concluded, that the way to get it, was to drink their way to it. L'Estrange.

TO CANVASS. v. n. To solicit; to try votes previously to the decisive act.

Elizabeth being to resolve upon an officer, and being, by some that canvassed for others, put in some doubt of that person the meant to advance, said, she was like one with a lantern seeking a man. Bacon.

This crime of canvassing, or soliciting, for church preferment, is, by the canon law, called simony. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CANY. adj. [from cane.]

1. Full of canes.

2. Consisting of canes.

But in his way lights on the barren plains
 Of Sericana, where Chinese drive,
 With sails and wind, their cany waggons light. Milton.

CANZONET. n. f. [canzonetta, Ital.] A little song.

Vecchi was most pleasing of all others, for his conceit and variety, as well his madrigals, as canzonetti. Peacham.

CAP. n. f. [cap, Welsh; cæppe, Sax. cappe, Germ. cappe, Fr. cappa, Ital. capa, Span. lappe, Dan. and Dutch; caput, a head, Latin.]

1. The garment that covers the head.

Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.—
 Why, this was mauld on a porringer,
 A velvet dith. Shaksp. Titus of the Shrew.
 I have ever held my cap off to thy fortune.—
 —Thou hast serv'd me with much faith. Shak.
 First, bolting sloth in wollen cap,
 Taking her after-dinner nap. Swift.

The cap, the whip, the masculine attire,
 For which they roughen to the sense. Thomson.

2. The ensign of the cardinalate.

Henry the Fifth did sometimes prophesy,
 If once he came to be a cardinal,
 He'd make his cap coequal with the crown. Shakspere's Henry vi.

3. The topmost; the highest.

Thou art the cap of all the fools alive. Shakf.

4. A reverence made by uncovering the head.

They more and less came in with cap and knee,
 Met him in boroughs, cities, villages. Shaksp.
 Should the want of a cap or a cringe so mortally discompose him, as we find afterwards it did. L'Estrange.

5. A vessel made like a cap.

It is observed, that a barrel or cap, whose cavity will contain eight cubical feet of air, will not serve a diver above a quarter of an hour. Wither.

6. Cap of a great gun. A piece of lead laid over the touch-hole, to preserve the prime.

7. Cap of maintenance. One of the regalia carried before the king at the coronation.

If one, by another occasion, take any thing from another, as boys sometimes use to cap one another, the same is straight felony. Spenser on Ireland.

3. To cap verses. To name alternately verses beginning with a particular letter; to name in opposition or emulation; to name alternately in contest.

Where Henderfon, and th' other masses,
 Were sent to cap texts, and put cases. Hudibras.
 Sure it is a pitiful pretence to ingenuity that can be thus kept up, there being little need of any other faculty but memory, to be able to cap texts. Government of the Tongue.

There is an author of ours, whom I would desire him to read, before he ventures at capping characters. Atterbury.

CAP à pè. } [cap à pè, Fr.] From head
CAP à pic. } to foot; all over.

A figure like your father,
 Arm'd at all points exactly, cap à pè,
 Appears before them, and, with solemn march,
 Goes slow and stately by them. Shakf. Hamlet.
 There for the two contending knights he sent;
 Arm'd cap à pè, with reverence low they bent. Dryden.

A woodlouse,
 That folds up itself in itself for a house,
 As round as a ball, without head, without tail, Inclos'd cap à pè in a strong coat of mail. Swift.

CAP-PAPER. A sort of coarse brownish paper. So called from being formed into a kind of cap to hold commodities. Having, for trial sake, filtered it through cap-paper, there remained in the filter a powder. Boyle.

CAPABILITY. n. f. [from capable.] Capacity; the quality of being capable.

Sure he that made us with such large discourse,
 Looking before and after, gave us not
 That capability and godlike reason
 To rust in us unus'd. Shakspere.

CAPABLE. adj. [capable, Fr.]

1. Sufficient to contain; sufficiently capacious.

When we consider so much of that space, as is equal to, or capable to receive a body of any assigned dimensions. Locke.

2. Endued with powers equal to any particular thing.

To say, that the more capable, or the better deserver, hath such right to govern, as he may compulsorily bring under the less worthy, is idle. Bacon.

When you hear any person give his judgment, consider with yourself whether he be a capable judge. Hutton.

3. Intelligent; able to understand.

Look you, how pale he glares;
 His form and cause conjoin'd, preaching to stones,
 Would make them capable. Shaksp. Hamlet.

4. Intellectually capacious; able to receive.

I am much bound to God, that he hath endued you with one capable of the best instructions. Digby.

5. Susceptible.

The soul, immortal substance, to remain conscious of joy, and capable of pain. Prior.

6. Qualified for; without any natural impediment.

There is no man that believes the goodness of God, but must be inclined to think, that he hath made some things for as long a duration as they are capable of. Tilletson.

7. Qualified for; without legal impediment.

Of my land,

Loyal and natural boy! I'll work the means
 To make thee capable. Shakspere's King Lear.

8. It has the particle of before a noun.

What fiercer springs their eager passions move,
 How capable of death for injur'd love! Dryden.

9. Hollow. This sense is not now in use.

Lean but upon a rush,
 The cicatrice, and capable impieasure,
 Thy palm some moments keeps. Shakspere.

The quality or state of being capable; knowledge; understanding; power of mind.

CAPACIOUS. adj. [capax, Lat.]

1. Wide; large; able to hold much.

Beneath th' incessant weeping of those drains
 I see the rocky fountains stretch'd immense,
 The mighty reservoirs of harden'd chalk,
 Or still compacted clay, capacious found. Thomson's Autumn.

2. Extensive; equal to much knowledge, or great design.

There are some persons of a good genius, and a capacious mind, who write and speak very obscurely. Watts.

CAPACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from capacious.] The power of holding or receiving; largeness.

A concave measure, of known and denominated capacity, serves to measure the capaciousness of any other vessel. In like manner, to a given weight the weight of all other bodies may be reduced, and so found out. Holder.

TO CAPACITATE. v. a. [from capacity.]

To make capable; to enable; to qualify. By this instruction we may be capacitated to observe those errors. Dryden.

These sort of men were sycophants only, and were endued with arts of life, to capacitate them for the conversation of the rich and great. Tatler.

CAPACITY. n. f. [capacité, Fr.]

1. The power of holding or containing anything.

Had our palace the capacity—
 To camp this host, we would all sup together. Shakspere.

Notwithstanding thy capacity
 Receiveth as the sea, naught enters there,
 Of what validity and pitch enters,
 But falls into abatement and low price. Shakf.

For they that most and greatest things embrace,
 Enlarge thereby their mind's capacity,
 As streams enlarg'd, enlarge the channel's space. Dante.

2. Room; space.

Space, considered in length, breadth, and thickness, I think, may be called capacity. Locke.

3. The force or power of the mind.

There remained, in the capacity of the exhausted cylinder, store of little rooms, or spaces, empty or devoid of air. Bye.

4. Power; ability.

Since the world's wide frame does not include
 A cause with such capacities endued,
 Some other cause o'er nature must preside. Blackmore.

5. State; condition; character.

A miraculous revolution, reducing many from the head of a triumphant rebellion to their old condition of masons, smiths, and carpenters; 1 that, in this capacity, they might repair what, as colonels and captains, they had ruined and defaced. South.

You desire my thoughts as a friend, and not as a member of parliament; they are the same in both capacities. Swift.

CAPARISON. n. f. [caparazon, a great cloak, Span.] A horse-cloth, or a sort of cover for a horse, which is spread over his furniture. Farrier's Dict.

Tilting furniture, emblazon'd shields, Imprecious quaint, caparisons, and steeds, Bases, and tinsel trappings; gorgeous knights, At joust and tournament. Paradise Lost.

Some wore a breastplate, and a light jupon; Their horses cloth'd with rich caparison. Dryden.

TO CAPARISON. v. a. [from the noun.]

The steeds caparison'd with purple stand,
With golden trappings, glorious to behold,
And champ betwixt their teeth the foaming gold. Dryden.

2. To dress pompously: in a ludicrous sense.

Don't you think, though I am caparison'd like a man, I have a doublet and hose in my disposition? Shakespeare's As you like it.

CAPE. n. f. [cape, Fr.]

1. Headland; promontory.

What from the cape can you discern at sea?—
—Nothing at all; it is a high wrought flood. Shakespeare's Othello.

The parting sun,
Beyond the earth's green cape and verdant isles,
Hesperian sets; my signal to depart. Milton.

The Romans made war upon the Tarentines, and obliged them by treaty not to sail beyond the cape. Arbushnot.

2. The neck-piece of a cloak.

He was clothed in a robe of fine black cloth, with wide sleeves and cape. Bacon.

CAPER. n. f. [from capere, Latin, a goat.]

A leap; a jump; a skip.

We, that are true lovers, run into strange capers; but as all is mortal in nature, so is all nature in love mortal in folly. Shakespeare.

Flimnap, the treasurer, is allowed to cut a capere, on the great rope, at least an inch higher than any other lord in the whole empire. Swift.

CAPER. n. f. [capparis, Lat.] An acid pickle. See CAPER BUSH.

We invent new sauces and pickles, which resemble the animal ferment in taste and virtue, as mangoes, olives, and capers. Floyer.

CAPER BUSH. n. f. [capparis, Lat.]

The fruit is fleshy, and shaped like a pear. This plant grows in the south of France, in Spain, and in Italy, upon old walls and buildings; and the buds of the flowers, before they are open, are pickled for eating. Miller.

TO CAPER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dance frolicsomely.

The truth is, I am only old in judgment; and he that will capere with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

2. To skip for merriment.

Our master

Cap'ring to eye her. Shakespeare's Tempest.
His nimble hand's instinct then taught each string

A cap'ring cheerfulness, and made them sing
To their own dance. Grayson.

The family tript it about, and capered like hailstones bounding from a marble floor. Arbushnot.

3. To dance: spoken in contempt.

The stage would need no force, nor song, nor dance,
Nor capering monsieur from active France. Rome.

CAPERER. n. f. [from capere.] A dancer: in contempt.

The tumbler's gambols some delight afford;
Not less the humble caperer on the cord:

But these are still insipid stuff to thee,
Coop'd in a ship, and toss'd upon the sea. Dryd.

CAP'PIAS. n. f. [Lat.] A writ of two sorts: One before judgment, called capias ad respondendum, in an action personal, if the sheriff, upon the first writ of distress, return that he has no effects in his jurisdiction. The other is a writ of execution after judgment. Cowell.

Edmund, I arrest thee
On capital treason. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Several cases deserve greater punishment than many crimes that are capital among us. Swift.

3. That affects life.

In capital causes, wherein but one man's life is in question, the evidence ought to be clear; much more in a judgment upon a war, which is capital to thousands. Bacon.

4. Chief; principal.

I will, out of that infinite number, reckon but some that are most capital, and commonly occur-rent both in the life and conditions of private men. Spenser on Ireland.

As to swerve in the least points, is error; so the capital enemies thereof God hateth, as his deadly foes, aliens, and, without repentance, children of endless perdition. Hooker.

They do, in themselves, tend to confirm the truth of a capital article in religion. Atterbury.

5. Chief; metropolitan.

This had been
Perhaps thy capital feat, from whence had spread
All generations; and had hither come,
From all the ends of th' earth, to celebrate
And reverence thee, their great progenitor. Paradise Lost.

6. Applied to letters: large; such as are written at the beginnings or heads of books.

Our most considerable actions are always present, like capital letters to an aged and dim eye. Taylor's Holy Living.

The first is written in capital letters, without chapters or verses. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

7. Capital stock. The principal or original stock of a trader or company.

The king took it for a great indignity, that thieves should offer to capitulate with him as enemies. Hayward.

I still pursued, and about two o'clock this afternoon he thought fit to capitulate. Spektator.

CAPITULATION. n. f. [from capitulate.]

Stipulation; terms; conditions.

It was not a complete conquest, but rather a dedition upon terms and capitulations, agreed between the conqueror and the conquered; wherein, usually, the yielding party secured to themselves their law and religion. Hume.

CAP'IVITREE. n. f. [copaiba, Lat.]

This tree grows near a village called Ayspel, in the province of Antiochi, in the Spanish West Indies, about ten days journey from Carthagena. Some of them do not yield any of the balsam; those that do, are distinguished by a ridge which runs along their trunks. These trees are wounded in their centre, and they apply vessels to the wounded part, to receive the balsam. One of these trees will yield five or six gallons of balsam. Miller.

TO CAP'CH. v. a. I know not distinctly what this word means; perhaps, to strip off the hood.

Capot your rabins of the synod,
And saepe the canons with a why not. Hudibras.
CAPRON. n. f. [capo, Lat.] A caltreated cock.
In good roast beef my landlord sticks his knife.
The capronat delights his dainty wife. Gay.

TO CAPTIVE. v. a. [from the noun.] It was used formerly with the accent on the last syllable, but now it is on the first.] To take prisoner; to bring into a condition of servitude.

But being all defeated save a few,
Rather than fly, or be captiv'd, herself she flew. Spenser.

Thou leavest them to hostile sword
Of heathen and profane, their carcasses
To dogs and tows a prey, or else captiv'd. Mil.

What further fear of danger can there be?
Beauty, which captives all tangles, lets me free. Dryden.

Still lay the god: the nymph surpris'd,
Yet mistress of herself, devis'd
How the the vagrant might intrude,
And captive him who captives all. Prior.

CAPTIVITY. n. f. [captivité, French; captivitas, low Latin.]

They had run themselves too far out of breath, to go back again the same career. Sidney.

2. A course; a race.

What rein can hold licentious wickedness,
When down the hill he holds his fierce career? Shaksp.

3. Height of speed; swift motion.

It is related of certain Indians, that they are able, when a horse is running in his full career, to stand upright on his back. Wilkins.

Practise them now to curb the turning steed,
Mocking the foe; now to his rapid speed
To give the rein, and, in the full career,
To draw the certain sword, or send the pointed spear. Prior.

4. Course of action; uninterrupted procedure.

Shall quips and sentences, and these paper bullets of the brain, awe a man from the career of his humour? Shaksp.

The heir of a blasted family has rose up, and promised fair, and yet at length a cross event has certainly met and slept him in the career of his fortune. South.

Knight in knightly deeds should persevere,
And still continue what at first they were;
Continue, and proceed in honour's fair career. Dryden.

To CAREER. v. n. [from the noun.] To run with swift motion.

With eyes, the wheels
Of beryl, and careering fires between. Milton.

CARELESSNESS. n. f. [from careless.]

Heedlessness; inattention; negligence; absence of care; manner void of care.

For Coriolanus neither to care whether they love or hate him, manifests the true knowledge he has in their disposition, and, out of his noble carelessness, lets them plainly see it. Shaksp.

Who, in the other extreme, only doth
Call a rough carelessness good fashion;
Whose cloak his spurs tear, or whom he spits on,
He cares not. Donne.

It makes us to walk warily, and tread sure, for fear of our enemies; and that is better than to be flattered into pride and carelessness. Taylor.

The ignorance or carelessness of the servants can hardly leave the master disappointed. Temple.

I who at some times spend, at others spare,
Divided between carelessness and care. Pope.

CARELESS. adj. [from care.]

1. Having no care; feeling no solicitude; unconcerned; negligent; inattentive; heedless; regardless; thoughtless; neglectful; unheeding; unthinking; unmindful: with of or about.

And rattling roaches stop to make thee way. Gay.

CARMELITE. n. f. [carmelite, Fr.] A sort of pear.

CARMINATIVE. adj. [supposed to be so called, as having vim carminis, the power of a charm.]

Carminatives are such things as dilute and relax at the same time, because wind occasions a spasm, or convulsion, in some parts. Whatever promotes indissoluble perspiration, is carminative; for wind is perspirable matter retained in the body. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Carminative and diuretic.

Will damp all passion sympathetic. Swift.

CARMINE. n. f. A bright red or crimson colour, bordering on purple, used by painters in miniature. It is the most valuable product of the cochineal mastic, and of an excessive price. Chambers.

CARNAGE. n. f. [carnage, Fr. from caro, carnis, Lat.]

1. Slaughter; havoc; massacre.

He brought the king's forces upon them rather as to carnage than to fight, inasmuch as, without any great loss or danger to themselves, the greatest part of the seditious were slain. Huyward.

2. Heaps of flesh.

Such a scent I draw

Of carnage, prey innumerable! and taste
The favour of death from all things there that live. Milton.

His ample maw with human carnage fill'd,
A milky deluge next the giant swill'd. Pope.

CARNAL. adj. [carnal, Fr. carnalis, low Lat.]

1. Fleishly; not spiritual.

Thou dost justly require us to submit our understandings to thine, and deny our carnal reason, in order to thy sacred mysteries and commands. King Charles.

From that pretence

Spiritual laws by carnal pow'r shall force
On every conscience. Milton.

Not such in carnal pleasure: for which cause,
Among the beads no mate for thee was found. Milton.

A glorious apparition! had not doubt,
And carnal fear, that day dimm'd Adam's eye. Milton.

He perceives plainly, that his appetite to spiritual things abates, in proportion as his sensual appetite is indulged and encouraged; and that carnal desires kill not only the desire, but even the power, of tasting purer delights. Atterb.

2. Lustful; lecherous; libidinous.

This carnal cur

Preys on the issue of his mother's body. Shakspeare.

CARNALITY. n. f. [from carnal.]

By this method, and by this course of diet, with fudgorics, the ulcers are healed, and that carnosity resolved. Wissman.

CARNOUS. adj. [from caro, carnis, Lat.] Fleishy.

The first or outward part is a thick and carnous covering, like that of a walnut; the second, a dry and fibrous coat, commonly called mace. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The muscle whetely he is enabled to draw himself together, the academists desire to be a distinct carnous muscle, extended to the ear. Ray on the Creation.

CAROB, or St. John's Bread. [foliqua, Lat.]

A tree very common in Spain, and in some parts of Italy, where it produces a great quantity of long, flat, brown-coloured pods, which are thick, mealy, and of a sweetish taste. These pods are eaten by the poorer inhabitants. Milton.

CAROCHE. n. f. [from carosse, Fr.] A coach; a carriage of pleasure. It is used in the comedy of Albumazar, but now it is obsolete.

CAROL. n. f. [carola, Ital. from chorus, Lat.]

1. A song of joy and exultation.

And let the Graces dance unto the rest,
For they can do it best;

For whilst the maidens do their carol sing,
To watch the woods shall answer, and their echo ring. Spenser's Epithalamium.

Even in the Old Testament, if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many heartie-like airs as carols. Bacon.

Oppos'd to her, on t'other side advance
The costly feast, the carol, and the dance.

CAR

Minstrels and musick, poetry and play,
And balls by night, and tournaments by day. Dryden.

2. A song of devotion.

No night is now with hymns or carol blest. Shakspeare.

They gladly thither haste; and, by a choir
Of squadron'd angels, hear his carol sung. Milton.

The carol they began that hour,
How that a life was but a flower. Shakspeare.

TO CAROL. v. n. [carolare, Ital.] To sing; to warble; to sing in joy and festivity.

Hark, how the cheerful birds dochant their lays,
And carol of love's praise. Spenser.

This done, the song, and carol'd out so clear,
That men and angels might rejoice to hear. Dryden.

How ring swans, their throats release'd
From native silence, carol sounds harmonious. Prior.

TO CAROL. v. a. To praise; to celebrate in song.

She with precious viol'd liquors heals,
For which the shepherds at their festivals

Carol her goodness loud in rustic lays. Milton.

CAROTID. adj. [carotides, Lat.] Two arteries which arise out of the ascending trunk of the aorta, near where the subclavian arteries arise.

The carotid, vertebral, and splenetick arteries, are not only variously contorted, but also here and there dilated, to moderate the motion of the blood. Ray on the Creation.

CAROUSAL. n. f. [from carouse.] It seems more properly pronounced with the accent upon the second syllable; but Dryden accents it on the first. A festival.

This game, these carousals Aescanias taught,
And building riba to the Latins brought. Dryden.

TO CAROUSE. v. n. [carousser, Fr. from gar ausse, all out, Germ.] To drink; to quaff; to drink largely.

He calls for wine: a health, quoth he, as if H'ad been aboard carousing to his mates
After a storm. Shakspeare.

Learn with how little life may be preserv'd,
In gold and myn they need not to carouse. Raleigh.

Now hats fly off, and youths carouse,
Hearts first go round, and then the house,
The brides come back and thick. Suckling.

Under the shadow of friendly boughs
They sit carousing, where their liquor grows. Waller.

TO CAROUSE. v. a. To drink up lavishly.

Now my sick fool, Rodrigo,
Whom love hath turn'd almost the wrong side out,
To Desdemona hath to-night carous'd
Potent's pottle deep. Shakspeare.

Our cheerful guests carouse the sparkling tears
Of the rich grape, whilst musick charms their ears. Denham.

1. A drinking match.

Wait in wild riot what your land allows,
There ply the early feast, and late carouse. Pope.

2. A hearty dose of liquor.

He had to many eyes watching over him, as he could not drink a full carouse of sack, but the state was advertised thereof within few hours after. Darwin on Ireland.

Please you, we may contrive this afternoon,
And quaff carouses to our mistress's health. Shakspeare.

CAROUSE. n. f. [from carouse.] A drinker; a tuper.

The bold carouser, and advent'ring dame,
Nor tear the fever, nor refuse the flame;
Safe in his skull, from all constraint set free
But conscious shame, remorse, and pity. Greene.

CARP. n. f. [carpe, Fr.] A pond fish.

A friend of mine stored a pond of three or four acres with carpi and touch. Hale.
To CARP. v. n. [carpo, Lat.] To censure; to caviil; to find fault; with at before the thing or person censured.
 Testulus even eaten, through discontentment, carpet injuriously at them, as though they did it even when they were free from such meaning. Hooper.

This your all-licens'd fool
 Does hourly carp and quarrel, breaking forth
 In rank and not to be endured riots. Shakespeare.
 No, not a tooth or nail to scratch
 And at my actions carp or catch. Herbert.
 When I spoke,
 My honest homely words were carp'd and censur'd,
 For want of courtly stile. Dryden.

CARPENTER. n. f. [charpentier, Fr.] An artificer in wood; a builder of houses and ships. He is distinguished from a joiner, as the carpenter performs larger and stronger work.

This work performed with advisement good,
 Godfrey his carpenters, and men of skill
 To all the camp, sent to an aged wood. Faifair.
 In building Hiero's great ship, there were three hundred carpenters employed for a year together. Hilkin.

In burden'd vessels first with speedy care,
 His plenteous stores do feastm'd timbers tend;
 Thither the brawny carpenters repair,
 And, as the surgeons of maim'd ships attend. Dryden.

CARPENTRY. n. f. [from carpenter.] The trade or art of a carpenter.

It had been more proper for me to have introduced carpentry before joinery, because necessity did doubtless compel our forefathers to use the convenience of the first, rather than the extravagancy of the last. Mason's Medic. Exerc.

CARPER. n. f. [from To carp.] A caviller; a censorious man.

I have not these weeds,
 By putting on the cuning of a carper. Shakspeare.

CARPET. n. f. [harpet, Dutch.]
 1. A covering of various colours, spread upon floors or tables.

Be the Jacks fair within, the Jills fair without,
carpets laid, and every thing in order? Shakspeare.

Against the wall, in the middle of the hall place, is a chair placed before him, with a table and carpet before it. Bacon.

2. Ground variegated with flowers, and level and smooth.

Go signify as much, while here we march
 Upon the grady carpet of this plain. Shakspeare.
 The carpet ground shall be with leaves o'er-spread,
 And boughs shall weave a cov'ring for your head. Dryden.

3. Any thing variegated.

The whole dry land is, for the most part,
 covered over with a lovely carpet of green grain,
 and other herbs. Ruy.

4. Carpet is used, proverbially, for a state of ease and luxury; as, a carpet knight, a knight that has never known the field, and has recommended himself only at table.

He is knight, dubbed with unhacked rapier, and on carpet consideration. Shakspeare.

5. To be on the carpet [sur le tapis, Fr.] is to be the subject of consideration; an affair in hand.

To CARPET. v. a. [from the noun.] To spread with carpets.

We found him in a fair chamber, richly hang'd and carpeted under foot, without any degrees to the state; he was set upon a low throne, richly
 VOL. I.

adorned, and a rich cloth of state over his head,
 of blue satin embroidered. Bacon.
 The dry land we find every where naturally carpeted over with grass, and other agreeable wholesome plants. Derham.

CARPING. particip. adj. [from To carp.] Captious; censorious.

No carping critic interrupts his praise,
 No rival drives but for a second place. Granville.
 Lay aside therefore a carping spirit, and read even an adversary with an honest design to find out his true meaning; do not snatch at little lapses, and appearances of mistake. Watts.

CARPINGLY. adv. [from carping.] Captiously; censoriously.

We derive out of the Latin at second hand by the French, and make good English, as in these adverbs, carpingly, currently, actively, colourably. Camden's Remains.

CARPMAKERS. n. f. A kind of coarse cloth made in the north of England. Phillips.

CARPUS. n. f. [Latin.] The wrist, so named by anatomists, which is made up of eight little bones, of different figures and thickness, placed in two ranks, four in each rank. They are strongly tied together by the ligaments which come from the radius, and by the annular ligament.

CARRACK. See CARAC.

CARRAT. See CARAT.

CARRAWAY. See CARAWAY.

Nay, you shall see mine orchard, where, in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting, with a dish of carraways, and so forth; come, cousin, silence, and then to bed. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

CARRIAGE. n. f. [cariage, Fr. baggage; from carry.]

1. The act of carrying, or transporting, or bearing any thing.

The unequal agitation of the winds, though material to the carriage of sounds farther or less way, yet do not confound the articulation. Bacon.
 If it seem so strange to move this obelisk for so little space, what may we think of the carriage of it out of Egypt? Wilkins.

2. Conquest; acquisition.

Solyman refused to besiege Vienna, in good hope that, by the carriage away of that, the other cities would, without resistance, be yielded.
Amelin's History of the Turks.

3. Vehicle; that in which any thing is carried.

What horse or carriage can take up and bear away all the loppings of a branchy tree at once? Watts.

4. The frame upon which cannon is carried.

He commanded the great ordnance to be laid upon carriages, which before lay bound in great unwieldy timber, with rings fastened thereto, and could not handily be removed to or fro.
Knutson's History of the Turks.

5. Behaviour; personal manners.

Before his eyes he did cast a mist, by his own insinuation, and by the carriage of his youth, that expell'd a natural princely behaviour. Bacon.
 Though in my face there's no affected frown,
 Nor in my carriage a feign'd niceness shown,
 I keep my humour still without a stain. Dryden.
 Let them have ever so learned lectures of breeding, that which will most influence their carriage will be the company they converse with,
 and the fashion of those about them. Locke.

6. Conduct; measures; practices.

You may hurt yourself; nay, utterly grow from the king's acquaintance, by this carriage. Shakspeare.

He advised the new governor to have so much discretion in his carriage, that there might be no notice taken in the exercise of his religion. Clarendon.

7. Management; manner of transacting. Not used.

The manner of carriage of the business, was as if there had been secret inquisition upon him.
Bacon's Henry viii.

CARRIER. n. f. [from To carry.]

1. One who carries something.

You must distinguish between the motion of the air, which is but a vehiculum cause, a carrier of the sounds, and the sound conveyed. Bacon.
 For winds, when homeward they return, will drive

The loaded carriers from their evening hive. Dryden.

2. One whose profession or trade is to carry goods for others.

I have rather made it my choice to transcribe all, than to venture the loss of my originals by post or carrier. Pierce's Letters.

The roads are crowded with carriers, laden with rich manufactures. Swift.

3. A messenger; one who carries a message.

The welcome news is in the letter found;
 The carrier's not commissioned to expound;
 It speaks itself. Dryden's Religio Laici.

4. The name of a species of pigeons, so called from the reported practice of some nations, who send them with letters tied to their necks, which they carry to the place where they were bred, however remote.

There are tame and wild pigeons; and of tame
 there are criers, carriers, rants. Walton.

CARRION. n. f. [charogne, Fr.]

1. The carcass of something not proper for food.

They did eat the dead carriens, and one another soon after; inasmuch that the very carcasses they scraped out of their graves. Spenser on Ireland.

It is I
 That, lying by the violet in the sun,
 Do as the carrien does, not as the flower. Shakspeare.

This foul deed shall smell above the earth,
 With carrien men groaning for burial. Shakspeare.

You'll ask me why I rather choose to have A weight of carrien flesh, than to receive Three thousand ducats. Shakspeare.

Ravens are seen in flocks where a carrien lies,
 and wolves in herds to run down a deer. Temple.

Sheep, oxen, horses fall; and heap'd on high,
 The differing species in confusion lie;
 Till, warn'd by frequent ills, the way they found
 To lodge their loathsome carrien under ground. Dryden.

Criticks, as they are birds of prey, have ever a natural inclination to carrien. Pope.

CASEMENT. n. f. [casamento, Ital.] A window opening upon hinges.

Why, then may you have a casement of the great chamber window, where we play, open, and the moon may shine in at the casement.

Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.

Here in this world they do much knowledge read,

And are the casements which admit most light.

Davies.

They, waken'd with the noise, did fly
From inward room to window eye,
And gently opening lid, the casement,
Look'd out, but yet with some amazement.

Hudibras.

There is as much difference between the clear representations of the understanding then, and the obscure discoveries that it makes now, as there is between the prospect of a casement and a key-hole.

South.

CASEOUS. adj. [caseus, Latin.] Resembling cheese; cheesy.

Its fibrous parts are from the caseous parts of the chyle.

Flyer on the Humours.

CASHIER. n. f. [from cash.] He that has charge of the money.

If a steward or cashier be suffered to run on, without bringing him to a reckoning, such a foolish forbearance will teach him to shrieve.

South.

A Venetian, finding his son's expenses grow very high, ordered his cashier to let him have no more money than what he should count when he received it.

Locke.

Flight of cashiers, or mobs, he'll never mind;
And knows no losses, while the muse is kind.

Pope.

TO CASHIER. v. a. [caffer, French; cafsare, Latin.]

1. To discard; to dismiss from a post, or a society, with reproach.

Does't not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee,
And thou by that small hurt hast cashier'd Cassio.

Shakespeare.

Seconds in factions many times prove principals; but many times also they prove cyphers, and are cashier'd.

Bacon.

If I had omitted what he said, his thoughts and words being thus cashier'd in my hands, he had no longer been Lucretius.

Dryden.

They have already cashier'd several of their followers as mutineers.

Addison's Freeholder.

The ruling rogue, who dreads to be cashier'd, contrives, as he is hated, to be fear'd.

Swift.

2. It seems, in the following passages, to signify the same as to annul; to vacate; which is sufficiently agreeable to the derivation.

If we should find a father corrupting his son, or a mother her daughter, we must charge this upon a peculiar anomaly and baseness of nature; if the name of nature may be allowed to that which seems to be utter cashiering of it, and deviation from, and a contradiction to, the common principles of humanity.

South.

Some cashier, or at least endeavour to invalidate, all other arguments, and forbid us to hearken to those proofs, as weak or fallacious.

Locke.

CASK. n. f. [casque, French; cadus, Latin.] 1. A barrel; a wooden vessel to stop up liquor or provisions.

The patient turning himself abed, it makes a fluctuating kind of noise, like the rumbling of water in a cask.

Harvey.

Perhaps to-morrow he may change his wine,
And drink old sparkling Alban, or Setine,
Whose title, and whose age, with mould o'er-grown,

The good old cask for ever keeps unknown.

Dryden.

2. It has cask in a kind of plural sense, to signify the commodity or provision of casks.

Great inconveniences grow by the bad cask being commonly to ill seasoned and conditioned, as that a great part of the beer is ever lost and cast away.

Raleigh.

CASK. n. f. [casque, Fr. casco, Lat.] CASQUE. } A helmet; armour for the head: a poetical word.

Let thy blows, doubly redoubled,

Fall like amazing thunder on the casque
Of thy pernicious enemy.

Shakespeare.

And these
Sling weighty stones, when from afar they fight;
Their casques are cork, a covering thick and light.

Dryden.

Why does he load with darts
His trembling hands, and crush beneath a cask
His wrinkled brows?

Addison.

CASKET. n. f. [a diminutive of casque, a chest, Fr. casse, caffette.] A small box or chest for jewels, or things of particular value.

They found him dead, and cast into the streets,
An empty casquet, where the jewel, hic,

By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away.

Shakespeare.

O ignorant poor man! what dost thou bear
Lock'd up within the casquet of thy breast?

What jewels and what riches hast thou there?
What heav'nly treasure in so weak a chest?

Davies.

Mine eye hath found that sad sepulchral rock,
That was the casque of heav'n's tickle floor.

Milton.

That had by chance pick'd up his choicest treasure

In one dear casquet, and sav'd only that. Ormsby.

This casquet India's glowing gems unblocks,
And all Arabia breathes from yonder box. Pope.

CASSAVI. n. f. A plant.

CASSADA. } n. f. A plant. It is cultivated in all the warm parts of America, where the root, after being divested of its milky juice, is ground to flour, and then made into cakes of bread. Of this there are two sorts. The most common has purplish stalks, with the veins and leaves of a purplish colour; but the stalks of the other are green, and the leaves of a lighter green. The last sort is not venomous, even when the roots are fresh and full of juice; which the negroes frequently dig up, roast, and eat, like potatoes, without any ill effects.

Miller.

CASSAWARE. See CASSIOWARY.

CASSIA. n. f. A sweet spice mentioned by Moses, Ex. xxx. 24. as an ingredient in the composition of the holy oil, which was to be made use of in the consecration of the sacred vessels of the tabernacle. This aromatick is said to be the bark of a tree very like cinnamon, and grows in the Indies without being cultivated.

Calmet.

All thy garments smell of myrrh, aloes, and cassia.

Psalms.

CASSIA. n. f. The name of a tree.

It hath a cylindrical, long, taper, or flat pod, divided into many cells by transverse diaphragms; in each of which is contained one hard seed, lodged, for the most part, in a clammy black substance, which is purgative. The flowers have five leaves, disposed orbicularly.

Miller.

The casting of the skin is, by the ancients, compared to the breaking of the secundine, or cawl, but not rightly; for that were to make every casting of the skin a new birth: and besides, the secundine is but a general cover, not shaped according to the parts, but the skin is shaped according to the parts. The creatures that cast the skin, are the snake, the viper, the grasshopper, the lizard, the silk worm, &c. Bacon.

O fertile head, which every year
Could such a crop of wonders bear !
Which might it never have been cast,
Each year's growth added to the last,
These lofty branches had supply'd
The earth's bold sons prodigious pride. Waller.
The waving harvest bends beneath his blast,
The forest shakes, the groves their honours cast. Dryden.

From hence, my lord, and love, I thus conclude,
That though my homely ancestors were rude,
Mean as I am, yet may I have the grace
To make you father of a generous race:
And noble then am I, when I begin,
In virtue cloth'd, to cast the rags of sin. Dryden.

Yet all these dreadful deeds, this deadly fray,
A cast of dreadful dust will soon ally. Dryden.

3. State of any thing cast or thrown.

In his own instance of casting umbra-ace though it partake more of contingency than of freedom; supposing the posture of the party's hand, who did throw the dice; supposing the figure of the table; and of the dice themselves; supposing the measure of force applied, and supposing all other things which did concur to the production of that cast, to be the very same they were, there is no doubt but, in this case, the cast is necessary.
Bramhall's Conf. to Hobbes.

Plato compares life to a game at tables; there what cast we shall have is not in our power; but to manage it well, that is. Norris.

CATECHUMENICAL. adj. [from catechumen.] Belonging to the catechumens.

CATEGORICAL. adj. [from category.] Absolute; adequate; positive; equal to the thing to be exprest.

The king's commissioners desired to know, whether the parliament's commissioners did believe that bishops were unlawful? They could never obtain a categorical answer. Clarendon.

A single proposition, which is also categorical, may be divided again into simple and complex. Watts.

CATEGORICALLY. adv. [from categorical.]

1. Directly; expressly.

2. Positively; plainly.

I dare affirm, and that categorically, in all parts wherever trade is great, and continues so, that trade must be nationally profitable. Child.

CATEGORY. n. f. [κατηγορία.] A class; a rank; an order of ideas; a predicament.

The absolute infinitude, in a manner, quite changes the nature of beings, and casts them into a different category. Chyng.

CATENARIAN. adj. [from catena, Lat.] Relating to a chain; resembling a chain.

In geometry, the catenarian curve is formed by a rope or chain hanging freely between two points of suspension. Hutton.

The back is bent after the manner of the catenarian curve, by which it obtains that curvature that is safest for the included marrow. Chyng.

CATER. n. f. [quatre, French.] The four of cards and dice.

CATER-COUSIN. n. f. A corruption of quatre-cousin, from the ridiculousness of calling cousin or relation to so remote a degree.

His mother and he, having your worship's reverence, are scarce cater-cousins. Shakespeare.

Poetry and reason, how come these to be cater-cousins? Rymer.

CATERER. n. f. [from cater.] One employed to select and buy in provisions for the family; the provider or purveyor.

Let no scent offensive the chamber infest;
Let fancy, not coil, prepare all our dishes;
Let the caterer mind the taste of each guest,
And the cook in his dressing comply with their wishes. Ben Jonson.

He made the greedy ravens to be Elias's caterers, and bring him food. King Charles.

Seldom shall one see in cities or courts that athletic vigour, which is seen in poor houses, where nature is their cook, and necessity their caterer. South.

CATERESS. n. f. [from cater.] A woman employed to cater, or provide victuals.

Impostor! do not charge innocent nature,
As it would her children should be riotous
With her abundance: she, good cateress, Means her provision only to the good. Milton.

CATERPILLAR. n. f. [This word Skinner and Minsheu are inclined to derive from chaute peluse, a weasel. It seems easily deducible from cates, food, and piller, Fr. to rob; the animal that eats up the fruits of the earth.]

1. A worm which, when it gets wings, is sustained by leaves and fruits.

The caterpillar breeder of dew and leaves;
for we see infinite caterpillars breed upon trees and hedges, by which the leaves of the trees or hedges are consumed. Bacon.

Was no dispute between
The caterer and his brethren? Hobbes.

CATES. n. f. [of uncertain etymology: Skinner imagines it may be corrupted from delicate; which is not likely, because Junius observes, that the Dutch have cates in the same sense with our cater. It has no singular.] Viands; food; dish of meat; generally employed to signify nice and luxurious food.

Thou can acceptance, fir, creates
The entertainment perfect, not the cates. Ben Jonson.

O wretched riot, never well content
With less you'd live; humane and riotous
Or cates by land and sea far rent and sent. Rule 4.

Alas, how simple to these cates,
Was that crude apple that diverted Eve! Milton.
They, by th' alluring odour drawn, in haste
Fly to the dale cates, and crowding lip
T' a palatable ban. Philips.
With costly cates she stain'd her frugal board,
Then with ill-gotten wealth she bought a lord. Arbutnot.

CATTISH. n. f. The name of a sea fish in the West Indies; so called from its round head and large glaring eyes, by which they are discovered in hollow rocks. Phillips.

CATHARPINGS. n. f. Small ropes in a ship, running in little blocks from one side of the shrouds to the other, near the deck: they belong only to the main shrouds; and their use is to force the shrouds tight, for the ease and safety of the masts, when the ship rolls. Harris.

CATHARTICAL. } adj. [καθαρτικός.] Purg-CATHARTICK. } ing medicines. The vermicular or peristaltick motion of the guts continually helps on their contents, from the pylorus to the rectum; and every irritation either quickens that motion in its natural order, or occasions some little inversions in it. In both, what but slightly adheres to the coats will be loosened, and they will be more agitated, and thus rendered more fluid.
By this only it is manifest, how a cat- hartic hastens and increases the discharges by stool; but where the force of the stimulus is great, all the appen-dages of the bowels, and all the viscera in the abdomen, will be twitched; by which a great deal will be drained back into the intestines, and made a part of what they discharge. Quincy.

Quicksilver precipitated either with gold, or without addition, into a powder, is wont to be strongly enough cathartick, though the chymists have not proved, that either gold or mercury bath any salt, much less any that is purgative.

Bosley's Septennial Chymist.
Lustrations and catharticks of the mind were sought for, and all endeavour used to calm and regulate the fury of the passions. Thomson's Poem.
The piercing causticks ply their spiculous pow'rs,
Emetics reach, and keen catharticks scour. Garth.

Plato has called mathematical demonstrations
the catharticks or purgatives of the soul. Addison.

See to thy cause, and thee, my heart inclin'd,
Or love to party had reduc'd my mind. Troilus.

To CAUSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To effect as an agent; to produce.

Never was man whose apprehensions are sober, and by a positive inspection advised, but hath found by an insensible necessity one everlasting being, all for ever causing, and all for ever sustaining. Raleigh.

It is necessary in such a chain of causes to ascend to and terminate in some first, which should be the original of motion, and the cause of all other things; but itself be caused by none. South.

She weeping ask'd, in these her blooming years,
What unforeseen misfortune caus'd her care,
To loath her life, and languish in despair. Dryden.

Things that move to twist as not to affect the senses distinctly, and to cause not any train of ideas in the mind, are not perceived to move. Locke.

CAUSELESSLY. adv. [from causeless.]

Without cause; without reason.

Human laws are not to be broken with scandal, nor at all without reason; for he that does it causelessly, is a despiser of the law, and undevalues its authority. Taylor's Holy Living.

CAUSELESS. adj. [from cause.]

1. Having no cause; original in itself.

Reach to 'Almighty's sacred throne,
And make his causeless pow'r, the cause of all things, known. Blackmore's Creation.

2. Wanting just ground or motive.

Yet is my mouth upright,
And have avow'd to other lady late,
That, to remove the game, I have no might:
To change love causeless, is reproach to warlike knight. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

And me and mine threats not with war but death;

Thus causeless hatred endless is unceasing. Fairfax.
The causeless dislike, which others have conceived, is no sufficient reason for us to forbear in any place. Hesker.

A woman yet who apprehend
Some sudden cause of causeless fear,
Although that seeming cause take end,
A shaking through their limbs they find. Walker.

Alas! my fears are causeless, and ungrounded, Fantastick dreams, and melancholy fumes. Deſam.

CAUSER. n. f. [from cause.] He that causes; the agent by which an effect is produced.

His whole oration stood upon a short narration, what was the causer of this metamorphosis. Sidney.

Is not the causer of these timeleſs deaths
As blameful as the executioner? Shakespeare.

Abstinence, the apostle determines, is of no other real value in religion, than as a ministerial causer of moral effects. Rogers.

CAUSEY. } n. f. [chauffee, Fr.] This

CAUSEWAY. } word, by a false notion of its etymology, has been lately written causeway. } A way raised and paved; a way raised above the rest of the ground.

To Shippin the lot came forth westward by the causey. Chrom.

The other way Satan went down,
The causeway to hell-gate. Milton.

But that broad causeway will direct your way,
And you may reach the town by noon of day. Dryden.

Whole causeways parts the vale with shady lows;
Whole causeways the weary traveller repose. Pope.

CAUSTICAL. } adj. [causticus, L.] Epithets

CAUSTICK. } of medicaments which destroy the texture of the part to which they are applied, and eat it away, or burn it into an eschar, which they do by extreme minuteness, asperity, and quantity of motion, that, like those of fire itself, destroy the texture of the solids, and change what they are applied to into a substance like burnt flesh; which, in a little time, with detergent dressing, falls quite off, and leaves a vacuity in the part. Quincy.

If extirpation be safe, the best way will be by caustical medicines, or elecrotycks. Wifeman.

I proposed cauterizing by elecrotycks, and began with a caustick stone. Wifeman.

Air too hot, cold, and moist, abounding perhaps with caustick, astringent, and coagulating particles. Abraham.

CAUSTICK. n. f. A burning application.

It was a tenderness to mankind, that introduced corrosives and causticks, which are indeed but artificial fires. Temple.

The piercing causticks ply their spiteful pow'r, Emetics ranch, and keen cathartics scour. Garrick.

CAUTEL. n. f. [cautela, Lat.] Caution; scruple. Not used.

Perhaps he loves you now;
And now no fault of cautel doth besmirch
The virtue of his will. Shakespeare.

CAUTELOUS. adj. [cauteleux, Fr.]

1. Cautious; wary; provident. Not in use.

Patridge doth wish, like a cauteleux artisan, that the inward walls might bear some good there in the burden. Hutton.

2. Wily; cunning; treacherous.

Of themselves, for the most part, they are so cauteleux and wily headed, especially being men of so small experience and practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilities and sly shifts. Spenser's Ireland.

Your son
Will or exceed the common, or be caught
With cauteleux baits and practice. Shakespeare.

CAUTELOUSLY. adv. [from cauteleux.]

1. Cunningly; slyly; treacherously. Not in use.

All pretorian courts, if any of the parties be laid asleep, under pretence of a retirement, and the other party drain cauteleously get the first and advantage; yet they will let back all things in statu quo prius. Bacon's War with Spain.

2. Cautiously; warily.

The Jews, not resolved of the scintilla side of Jacob, do cauteleously, in their diets, abstain from both. Brown.

CAUTERIZA'TION. n. f. [from cauterize.]

The act of burning flesh with hot irons, or caustic medicaments.

They require, after cauterization, no such bandage, as that thereby you need to fear interruption of the spirits. Wifeman.

To CAUTERIZE. v. a. [cauteriser, Fr.]

To burn with the cautery.

For each true word a blister, and each false
Be cauterizing to the root o' th' tongue,
Consuming it with speaking. Shakespeare.

No marvel though cantharides have such a corrosive and cauterizing quality; for these is not one other of the subjects, but is bred of a similar matter. Bacon's Natural History.

The design of the cautery is to prevent the canal from closing; but the operators confess, that, in persons cauterized, the tears trickle down ever after. Sharp's Surgery.

CAUTERY. n. f. [cautis, L.]

Cautery is either actual or potential; the first is burning by a hot iron, and the latter with caustick medicines. The actual cautery is generally used to stop mortification, by burning the dead parts to the quick; or to stop the effusion of blood, by sealing up the vessels. Quincy.

In heat of fight it will be necessary to have your actual cautery always ready; for that will secure the bleeding arteries in a moment. Wifeman.

CAUTION. n. f. [caution, Fr. cautio, Lat.]

1. Prudence, as it respects danger; fore-sight; provident care; wariness against evil.

2. Security for.

Such conditions, and cautions of the condition, as might assure with as much assurance as worldly matters bear. Sidney.

The Cedar, upon this new acquit, gave him put of Baecharia for caution for his disbursements. Hume.

The parliament would yet give his majesty sufficient caution that the war should be prosecuted. Clarendon.

He that objects any crime, ought to give caution, by the means of sureties, that he will persevere in the prosecution of such crimes. Apollis.

3. Provision or security against.

In despite of all the rules and cautions of government, the most dangerous and mortal of vices will come off. L'Estrange.

4. Provisionary precept.

Attention to the forementioned symptoms affords the best cautions and rules of diet, by way of prevention. Arbutnot.

5. Warning.

To CAUTION. v. a. [from the noun.]

To warn; to give notice of a danger.

How shall our thought avoid the various care?
Or wisdom to our caution's soul declare
The different shapes thou pleasest to employ,
When bent to hurt, and certain to destroy? Pope.

You caution'd me against their charms,
But never gave me equal arms. Swift.

CAUTIONARY. adj. [from caution.] Given as a pledge, or in security.

I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hostage of your keeping it. Southey.

Is there no security for the island of Britain?
Has the enemy no cautionary towns and sea-ports to give us for securing trade? Swift.

CAUTIOUS. adj. [from cautus, Lat.]

Wary; watchful.

Be cautious of him; for he is sometimes an inconstant lover, because he hath a great advantage.

Swift.

CAUTIOUSLY. adv. [from cautious.] In an attentive wary manner; warily.

They know how fickle common lovers are: Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd; For few there are but have been once deceiv'd.

Dryden.

CAUTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from cautious.] Watchfulness; vigilance; circumspection; provident care; prudence with respect to danger.

I could not but approve their generous constancy and cautiousness.

King Charles.

We should always act with great cautiousness and circumspection, in points where it is not impossible that we may be deceived.

Addison.

TO CAW. v. n. [taken from the sound.] To cry as the rook, raven, or crow.

Ruffet-pated coughts, many in sort, Rising and cawing at the gun's report.

Shaksp.

A walk of aged elms, so very high, that the rooks and crows upon the tops seem to be cawing in another region.

Addison.

The rook, who high amid the boughs, In early spring, his airy city builds, And cawcawcawcaw.

Thomson's Spring.

TO CEASE. v. n. [ceffer, Fr. ceffo, Lat.]

1. To leave off; to stop; to give over; to desist: with from before a noun.

The lives of all, who cease from combat, spare; My brother's be your most peculiar care.

Dryden.

2. To fail; to be extinct; to pass away.

The poor man shall never cease out of the land.

Deuteronomy.

The soul being removed, the faculties and operations of life, sense, and intellect, cease from that mater corporea, and are no longer in it.

Hall's Origin of Mankind.

3. To be at an end.

But now the wonder ceases, since I see She kept them only, Tityrus, for thee.

Dryden.

4. To tell.

The ministers of Christ have ceased from their labours.

Spratt.

TO CEASE. v. a. To put a stop to; to put an end to.

Importune him for monies; be not ceas'd With slight denial.

Shakspere.

You may sooner, by imagination, quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower, than to make him stand still.

Bacon's Natural History.

Cease then this impious rage.

Milton.

But he, her tears to cease, Sent down the meek-eyed peace.

Milton.

The discord is complete, nor can they cease The dire debate, nor yet command the peace.

Dryden.

CEASE. n. f. [from the verb.] Extinction; failure: perhaps for decease.

The cease of majesty

Does not alone, but, like a gulph, withdraws What's near it with it.

Shakspere.

CEASELESS. adj. [from cease.] Incessant; perpetual; continual; without pause; without stop; without end.

My guilts, and multiplum'd ceaseless fire, O when my endless tears were hostlets spent.

Farfax.

All these with a ceaseless praise his works beav'd, Both day and night.

Milton.

Like an oak

That stands secure, though all the winds employ Their violence; and only sheds its leaves, Or mair, when the revolving spring restores.

Phosph.

CECITY. n. f. [cecitas, Lat.] Blindness; privation of sight.

They are not blind, nor yet distinctly see; there is in them no cecitas, yet more than a cecity; they have sight enough to discern the light, though not perhaps to distinguish objects or colours.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CECUTIENCY. n. f. [cecutio, Lat.] Tendency to blindness; cloudiness of sight.

There is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecutiency.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CEDAR. n. f. [cedrus, Lat.] A tree.

It is evergreen; the leaves are much narrower than those of the pine tree, and many of them produced out of one tubercle, resembling a painter's pencil; it hath male flowers, or katkins, produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The seeds are produced in large cones, squamose and turbinate. The extension of the branches is very regular in cedar trees; the ends of the shoots declining, and thereby shewing their upper surface, which is constantly clothed with green leaves, so regularly, as to appear at a distance like a green carpet, and, in waving about, make an agreeable prospect. It is surprising that this tree has not been more cultivated in England; for it would be a great ornament to barren bleak mountains, even in Scotland, where few other trees would grow; it being a native of Mount Libanus, where the snow continues most part of the year. Maundrel, in his travels, says, he measured one of the largest cedars on Mount Libanus, and found it to be twelve yards six inches in circumference, and found. At about five or six yards from the ground, it was divided into five limbs, each of which was equal to a great tree. The wood of this famous tree is accounted proof against the putrefaction of animal bodies. The saw-dust is thought to be one of the secrets used by the mountebanks, who pretend to have the embalming mystery. This wood is also said to yield an oil, which is famous for preserving books and writings; and the wood is thought by Bacon to continue above a thousand years sound.

Milner.

I must yield my body to the earth:

Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge, Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle; Under whose shade the ramping lion slept; Whose top branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree, And kept low shrubs from winter's pow'ful wind.

Shakspere.

CEDRINE. adj. [cedrinus, Lat.] Of or belonging to the cedar tree.

TO CEIL. v. a. [calo, Lat.] To overlay, or cover, the inner roof of a building.

And the greater house he ceiled with fir-tree, which he overlaid with fine gold.

Christies.

How will he, from his house ceild with cedar, be content with his Saviour's lot, not to have where to lay his head?

Dryden of Pety.

CEILING. n. f. [from ceil.] The inner roof.

Varnish makes ceilings not only shine, but last.

Bacon.

And now the thicken'd sky Like a dark ceiling flood; down rush'd the rain Impetuous.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

So when the sun by day, or moon by night, Strike on the polish'd brass their trembling light, The glittering species here and there divide, And cast their dubious beams from side to side: Now on the walls, now on the pavement play, And to the ceiling flath the glaring day.

Dryden.

CELANDINE. n. f. [cheilidoneum, Lat.] A plant.

The swallows use celandine, the linnet eupragia.

Milner.

CELTURE. n. f. [calatura, Lat.] The art of engraving or cutting in figures.

TO CELEBRATE. v. a. [celebro, Lat.]

1. To praise; to commend; to give praise to; to make famous.

The songs of Zion were, palms and pieces of poetry, that adored or celebrated the Supreme Being.

Addison.

I would have him read over the celebrated works of antiquity, which have stood the test of so many different ages.

Addison.

2. To distinguish by solemn rites; to perform solemnly.

He flew all them that were gone to celebrate the sabbath.

Mascebeck.

On the feast day, the father cometh forth, after divine service, into a large room, where the feast is celebrated.

Bacon.

3. To mention in a set or solemn manner, whether of joy or sorrow.

This pause of pow'r 'tis Ireland's hour to mourn;

While England celebrates your safe return.

Dryden.

CELEBRATION. n. f. [from celebrate.]

1. Solemn performance; solemn remembrance.

He laboured to drive sorrow from her, and to hasten the celebration of their marriage.

Sidney.

He shall conceal it,

While you are willing it shall come to note;

What time we will our celebration keep,

According to my birth.

Shakspere.

During the celebration of this holy sacrament, you attend earnestly to what is done by the priest.

Taylor.

2. Praise; renown; memorial.

No more shall be added in this place, his memory deserving a particular celebration, than that his learning, piety, and virtue, have been attained by few.

Clarendon.

Some of the ancients may be thought sometimes to have used a less number of letters, by the celebration of those who have added to their alphabet.

Hobbes's Elements of Speech.

CELEBRIOUS. adj. [celeber, Lat.] Famous; renowned; noted. Not in use.

The Jews, Jerusalem, and the Temple, having been always so celebrated; yet when, after their captivities, they were despoiled of their glory, even then the Assyrians, Greeks, and Romans, honoured with sacrifices the Most High God, whom that nation worshipped.

Grew.

CELEBRIOUSLY. adv. [from celebricus.] In a famous manner.

CELEBRIOUSNESS. n. f. [from celebricus.] Renown; fame.

CELEBRITY. n. f. [celebritas, Lat.] Public and splendid transaction.

Bacon.

CELESTRIACK. n. f. A species of parsley: it is also called turnep rooted celery.

CELESTITY. n. f. [celeritas, Lat.] Swift-ness; speed; velocity.

We very well see in them, who thus plead, a wonderful celerity of discourse: for, preserving at the trial but only some cause of suspicion, and fear lest it should be evil, they are presently, in one and the self-same breath, resolved, that what beginning soever it had, there is no possibility it should be good.

Hobbes.

His former custom and practice was ever full of forwardness and celerity to make head against them.

Bacon.

Thus, with imagin'd wings, our swift scene

flies,

In motion with no less celerity

Than that of thought.

Shakspere.

Three things concur to make a perception great; the bigness, the density, and the celerity of the body moved.

Boyle.

Whatever increaseth the density of the mass, even without encreaseth its celerity, heats, because denser body is hotter than a rarer.

Boyle.

CELESTIAL. n. f. A species of parsley.

CELESTIAL. adj. [celstis, Lat.]

1. Heavenly; relating to the superiour regions.

CEL

There stay, until the twelve celestial signs
Have brought about their annual reckoning.
Shakespeare.

The ancients commonly applied celestial descriptions of other climes to their own. Brown.

2. Heavenly; relating to the blessed state.
Play that sad note

I nam'd my knell, whilst I sit meditating
On that celestial harmony I go to. Shakespeare.

3. Heavenly, with respect to excellence.
Canst thou pretend desire, whom zeal inflam'd
To worship, and a pow'r celestial nam'd? Dryd.

Telemachus, his bloomy face
Glowing celestial sweet, with godlike grace. Pope.

CELESTIAL. n. f. [from the adj.] An inhabitant of heaven.

Thus affable and mild the prince precedes,
And to the dome th' unknown celestial leads.
Pope.

CELESTIALLY. adv. [from celestial.] In a heavenly manner.

TO CELESTIFY. v. a. [from celstis, Lat.] To give something of heavenly nature to any thing. Not used.

We should affirm, that all things were in all things, that heaven were but earth terrestrial'd, and earth but heaven celestified, or that each part above had influence upon its affinity below.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CELIAC. adj. [celia, the belly.] Relating to the lower belly.

The blood moving slowly through the celiac and mesenterick arteries, produces complaints.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CELIBACY. n. f. [from celebs, Lat.] Single life; unmarried state.

I can attribute their numbers to nothing but their frequent marriages; for they look on celibacy as an accursed state, and generally are married before twenty.
Spektator.

By teaching them how to carry themselves in their relations of husbands and wives, parents and children, they have, without question, adorned the gospel, glorified God and benefited man, much more than they could have done in the devoutest and strictest celibacy.
Atterbury.

CELIBATE. n. f. [calibatur, Lat.] Single life.

The males oblige themselves to celibate, and then multiplication is hindered.
Grant.

CELL. n. f. [cella, Lat.]

1. A small cavity or hollow place.
The brain contains ten thousand cells;
In each some active fancy dwells. Priest.

How bees sit ever, through a monarch reign,
Their separate cells and properties maintain. Pope.

2. The cave or little habitation of a religious person.

Besides she did intend confession
At Patrick's cell this ev'n; and there she was not.
Shakespeare.

Then did religion in a lary cell,
In empty, any contemplations dwell. Denham.

3. A small and close apartment in a prison.

4. Any small place of residence; a cottage.
Mine eyes be clos'd, but open left the cell
Of fancy, my internal light. Milton's Par. Lost.

For ever in this humble cell,
Let thee and I together dwell.
In cottages and lowly cells
True piety neglected dwells;
Till call'd to heav'n, its native seat,
Where the good man alone is great. Somerville.

5. Little bags or bladders, where fluids, or matter of different sorts are lodged; common both to animals and plants.

Quincy.

CELLAR. n. f. [cella, Lat.] A place under ground, where stores and liquors are reposit.

CEMENT. n. f. [cementum, Lat.]

1. The matter with which two bodies are made to cohere, as mortar or glue.

Your temples burned in their cement, and your franchises confined into an augre's bore. Shaksp.

There is a cement compounded of flour, whites of eggs, and stones powder'd, that becometh hard as marble. Bacon.

You may see divers pebbles, and a crust of cement or stone between them, as hard as the pebbles themselves. Bacon.

The foundation was made of rough stone, joined together with a moist firm cement; upon this was laid another layer, consisting of small stones and cement. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Bond of union in friendship.

Let not the peace of virtue, which is set betwixt us as the cement of our love, To keep it builded, be the ram to batter. Shaksp.

What cement should unite heaven and earth, light and darkness? Glanville.

Look over the whole creation, and you shall see, that the band or cement, that holds together all the parts of this great and glorious fabric, is gratitude. South.

TO CEMENT. v. a. [from the noun.] To unite by means of something interposed.

But how the fear of us
May cement their divisions, and bind up
The petty difference, we yet not know. Shaksp.

Liquid bodies have nothing to cement them; they are all loose and incoherent, and in a perpetual flux: even an heap of sand, or fine powder, will suffer no hollowness within them, though they be dry substances. Burnet.

Love with white lead cements his wings;
White lead was sent us to repair
Two brightest, brittle, earthly things,
A lady's face and china ware. Swift.

TO CEMENT. v. n. To come into conjunction; to cohere.

When a wound is recent, and the parts of it are divided by a sharp instrument, they will, if held in close contact for some time, reunite by insensation, and cement like one branch of a tree ingrafted on another. Sharp's Surgery.

CEMENTATION. n. f. [from cement.] The act of cementing, or uniting with cement.

CEMENTER. n. f. [from cement.] A person or thing that unites in society.

ritual.

What mockery will it be,
To want the bridegroom, when the priest attends
To speak the ceremonial rites of marriage! Shakf.

We are to carry it from the hand to the heart, to improve a ceremonial nicety into a substantial duty, and the modes of civility into the realities of religion. South.

Christ did take away that external ceremonial
worship that was among the Jews. Stillingfleet.

2. Formal; observant of old forms.

Oh monstrous, superstitious puritan,
Of schurr'd manners, yet ceremonial man,
That when thou meet'st one, with enquiring eyes
Dost search, and, like a needy broker, prize
The silk and gold he wears. Danoe.

With dumb pride, and a set formal face,
He moves in the dull ceremonial track,
With Jove's embroider'd coat upon his back.
Dryden.

CEREMO'NIAL. n. f. [from ceremony.]

1. Outward form; external rite; prescriptive formality.

The only condition that could make it prudent not to use them again, and to diminish respect to himself. Bacon.

3. Outward forms of state.

What art thou, thou idle ceremony?
What kind of god art thou, that suffer'st more
Of mortal grief, than do thy worshippers?
Art thou aught else but place, degree, and form?
Shakespeare.

A coarser place,
Where pomp and ceremonies enter'd not,
Where greatness was that out, and greatness well forgot. Dryden's Fables.

CÉROTE. n. f. The same with cerate.

In those which are critical, a cerote of oil of olives, with white wax, hath hitherto served my purpose. Wifeman.

CERTAIN. adj. [certain, Lat.]

1. Sure; indubitable; unquestionable; undoubted; that cannot be questioned,

At last, recovering heart, he does begin

To rub her temples, and to chafe her skin. Fairy Queen.

Soft, and more soft, at ev'ry touch it grew;
Like plantain was, when chafing hands reduce
The former mals to form, and frame to use. Dryden.

2. To heat by rage or hurry.

Have I not heard the sea, puff'd up with winds,
Rage like an angry boar chafed with sweat?

Shakspeare.

3. To perfume.

Lilies more white than snow
New fall'n from heav'n, with violets mix'd, did grow;

Whose scent to chaf'd the neighbour air, that you Would surely swear Arabian spices grew. Suckling.

4. To make angry; to inflame passion.

Her intercession chaf'd him so,
When she for thy repeal was suppliant,
That to close prison he commanded her. Shakspeare.
An offer of pardon more chafed the rage of those, who were resolved to live or die together. Sir J. An Hayward.

For all that he was inwardly chafed with the heat of youth and indignation, against his own people as well as the Rhodians, he moderated himself betwixt his own rage, and the offence of his soldiers. Knodler's History of the Turks.

This chaf'd the boar: his nostrils flames expire,
And his red eyeballs roll with living fire. Dryden.

To CHAFF. v. n.

1. To rage; to fret; to fume; to rave; to boil.

Therewith he 'gan full terribly to roar,
And chaf'd at that indignity right sore. Spenser.

CHAFF. n. f. [ceap, Sax. laf, Dutch.]
1. The husks of corn that are separated by thrashing and winnowing.

We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind,
That ev'n our corn shall seem as light as chaff,
And good from bad find no partition. Shakespeare.
Pleasure with instruction should be join'd;
So take the corn, and leave the chaff behind.
Dryden.

He set before him a sack of wheat, as it had been just thrashed out of the sheaf; he then bid him pick out the chaff from among the corn, and lay it aside by itself. Spectator.

2. It is used for any thing worthless.
To CHAFFER. v. n. [kauffen, Germ. to buy.] To treat about a bargain; to haggle; to bargain.

Nor rode himself to Paul's, the publick fair,
To chaffer for preferences with his gold,
Where bishopricks and sinecures are sold. Dryden.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t' other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a-jar. Swift.

In disputes with chairmen, when your master sends you to chaffer with them, take pity, and tell your master that they will not take a farthing less. Swift.

thing with which prisoners are bound.

Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
Or bound in formal, or in real chains. Pope.

3. A line of links with which land is measured.

A surveyor may as soon, with his chain, measure out infinite space, as a philosopher, by the quickest flight of mind, reach it; or, by thinking, comprehend it. Locke.

4. A series linked together, as of causes or thoughts; a succession; a subordination.

Those so mistake the christian religion, as to think it is only a chain of fatal decrees, to deny all liberty of man's choice toward good or evil.
Hammond.

As there is pleasure in the right exercise of any faculty, so especially in that of right reasoning; which is still the greater, by how much the consequences are more clear, and the chains of them more long. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

To CHAIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten or bind with a chain.

They repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich, and provide more piteous statutes daily to chain up and restrain the poor.

And in this vow do chain my soul with thine.
Shakespeare.

CHA'INPUMP. n. f. [from chain and pump.] A pump used in large English vessels, which is double, so that one rises as the other falls. It yields a great quantity of water, works easily, and is easily mended; but takes up a great deal of room, and makes a disagreeable noise. Chambers.

It is not long since the striking of the topmast, a wonderful great ease to great ships, both at sea and in harbour, hath been devised; together with the chainpump, which takes up twice as much water as the ordinary did; and we have lately added the bonnet and the drabble.
Raleigh's Essays.

CHA'INSHOT. n. f. [from chain and shot.]
Two bullets or half bullets, fastened together by a chain, which, when they work*, for the chapters which were upon the tops of the pillars. 1 Kings.

CHAIR. n. f. [chair, French.]

1. A moveable seat.
Whether thou choos'st Cervantes' serious air,
Or laugh and shake in Rabelais' easy chair,
Or praise the court, or magnify mankind,
Or thy griev'd country's copper chains unbind.
Pope.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person, without a back. Watts.

2. A seat of justice, or of authority.
He makes for England, here to claim the crown.—

—Is the chair empty? Is the sword unsword'd?
Is the king dead? Shakespeare's Richard III.
If thou be that princely eagle's bird,
Show thy descent by gazing 'gainst the sun;
For chair and dukedom, throne and kingdom,
say;
Either that's thine, or else thou wert not his.
Shakespeare.

The honour'd gods
Keep Rome in safety, and the chairs of justice Supply with worthy men. Shakespeare.

Her grace sat down to rest awhile,
In a rich chair of state. Shakespeare.

The committee of the commons appointed
Mr. Pym to take the chair. Clarendon.

In this high temple, on a chair of state,
The seat of audience, old Latinius sat. Dryden.

3. A vehicle: horn by men; a sedan.

And Phœbus 'gins arise,
His steeds to water at these springs,

On calic'd flowers that lies.

Shakespeare.

CHALK. n. f. [ceale, cealestan, Sax.
calch, Welsh.]

Chalk is a white fossil, usually reckoned a stone, but by some ranked among the hoies.
It is used in medicine as an absorbent, and is celebrated for curing the heartburn.

Chambers.

He maketh all the stones of the altar as chalk stones that are beaten in funder.

Isaiah.

Chalk is of two sorts; the hard, dry, strong chalk, which is best for lime; and a soft, unctuous chalk, which is best for lunds, because it easily dissolves with rain and frost.

Mortimer.

With chalk I first describe a circle here,
Where these ethereal spirits must appear.

Dryden.

To CHALK. v. a. [from the noun.]

Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly.

Shakspeare.

2. A demand of something as due.

Taking for his younglings cark,

Left greedy eyes to them might challenge lay,

Busy with o'er did their shoulders mark.

Sidney.

There must be no challenge of superiority, or discountenancing of freedom.

Collier.

3. In law.

An exception taken either against persons or things; persons, as in assize to the jurors, or any one or more of them, by the prisoner at the bar. Challenge made to the jurors, is either made to the array, or to the polls: challenge made to the array, is when the whole number is excepted against, as partially empannelled: challenge to or by the polls, is when some one or more are excepted against, as not indifferent: challenge to the jurors is divided into challenge principal, and challenge for cause: challenge principal is that which the law allows without cause alleged, or farther examination; as a prisoner at the bar, arraigned upon felony, may peremptorily challenge to the number of twenty, one after another, of the jury empannelled upon him, alleging no cause.

Cowell.

You are mine enemy, I make my challenge,
You shall not be my judge.

Shakspeare.

CHA'LLERGER. n. f. [from challenge.]

1. One that defies or summons another to combat.

Young man, have you challenged Charles the wrestler?

No, fair princess; he is the general challenger.

Shakspeare.

CHAMBLIST. n. f. [from chamber and list.] The joint or bending of the upper part of the hinder leg. Farrier's Dict.

CHAMELEON. n. f. [χamaileon.]

The chameleon has four feet, and on each foot three claws. Its tail is long; with this, as well as with its feet, it fastens itself to the branches of trees. Its tail is flat, its nose long, in a obtusely point; its back is sharp, its skin plaited, and jagged like a saw from the neck to the last joint of the tail, and upon its head it has something like a comb; like a fish, it has no neck. Some have asserted, that it lives only upon air; but it has been observed to feed on flies, caught with its tongue, which is about ten inches long, and three thick; made of white flesh, round, but flat at the end; or hollow and open, resembling an elephant's trunk. It also shrinks, and grows longer. This animal is said to assume the colour of those things to which it is applied; but our modern observers assure us, that its natural colour, when at rest and in the shade, is a bluish grey; though some are yellow, and others green, but both of a smaller kind. When it is exposed to the sun, the grey changes into a darker grey, inclining to a dun colour; and its parts, which have least of the light upon them, are changed into spots of different colours. The grain of its skin, when the light doth not shine upon it, is like cloth mixed with many colours. Sometimes, when it is handled, it seems speckled with dark spots, inclining to green. If it be put upon a black hat, it appears to be of a violet colour; and sometimes, if it be wrapped up in linen, it is white; but it changes colour only in some parts of the body. Colum.

A chameleon is a creature about the bigness of an ordinary lizard; his head unproportionably big, and his eyes great; he moveth his head without writhing of his neck, which is inflexible, as a hog doth; his back crooked, his skin spotted with little tumours, less eminent nearer the belly; his tail slender and long; on each foot he hath five fingers, three on the outside, and two on the inside; his tongue of a marvellous length in respect of his body, and hollow at the end, which he will launch out to prey upon flies; of colour green, and of a dusky yellow, brighter and whiter towards the belly; yet spotted with blue, white, and red. Bacon.

I can add colours ev'n to the chameleon; Change shapes with Proteus, for advantage. Shaksp.

One part devours the other, and leaves not so much as a mouthful of that popular air, which the chameleons gasp after. Decay of Piety.

The thin chameleon, fed with air, receives The colour of the thing to which he cleaves. Dryden.

As the chameleon, which is known To have no colours of his own, But borrows from his neighbour's hue His white or black, his green or blue. Prior.

In our common law, champion is taken no less for him that trieth the combat in his own case, than for him that fighteth in the case of another.

Cowell.

To CHAMPION, v. a. [from the noun.]

To challenge to the combat.

The seed of Barquo, kings!
Rather than so, come, Fate, into the list,
And champion me to th' utterance.

Shakespeare.

CHANCE, n. f. [chance, Fr.]

1. Fortune; the cause of fortuitous events.

As th' unthought accident is guilty
Of what we winny do, so we profess
Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies
Of every wind that blows.

Shakespeare.

The only man, of all that chance could bring
To meet my arms, was worth the conquering.

Dryden.

Chance is but a mere name, and really nothing in itself; a conception of our minds, and only a compendious way of speaking, whereby we would express, that such effects as are commonly attributed to chance, were verily produced by their true and proper causes, but without their design to produce them.

Bentley.

2. Fortune; the act of fortune; what fortune may bring: applied to persons.

These things are commonly not observed, but left to take their chance.

Racine's Essays.

3. Accident; casual occurrence; fortuitous event.

To say a thing is a chance or casualty, as it relates to second causes, is not profaneness, but a great truth; as signifying no more, than that there are some events besides the knowledge and power of second agents.

South.

The beauty I beheld has struck me dead;
Unknowingly she strikes, and kills by chance;
Poison is in her eyes, and death in ev'ry glance.

Dryden.

All nature is but art, unknown to thee;
All chance direction, which thou canst not see.

Pope.

4. Event; success; luck: applied to things.

Now we'll together, and the chance of gold shall
Be like our wanted quarrel!

Shakespeare.

5. Misfortune; unlucky accident.

You were us'd
To say extremity was the trier of spirits,
That common chances common men could bear.

Shakespeare.

6. Possibility of any occurrence.

A chance, but chance may lead, where I may meet

Some wand'ring spirit of heav'n, by fountain side,
Or in thick shade retir'd.

Milton's Par. Lost.

Then your ladyship might have a chance to escape this address.

Swift.

CHANCE, adj. [It is seldom used but in composition.] Happening by chance.

Now should they part, malicious tongues would say,

They met like chance companions on the way.

Dryden.

I would not take the gift,
Which, like a toy dropt from the hands of fortune,
Lay for the next chance owner.

Dryden.

To CHANCE, v. n. [from the noun.] To happen; to fall out; to fortune.

Think what a chance thou chancest on; but think—

Thou hast thy mistress still.

Shakespeare.

How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother?

Shakespeare.

Ay, Cisca, tell us what hath chanc'd to-day,

That Cæsar looks so sad.

Shakespeare.

He chanc'd upon divers of the Turks' victuals, whom he easily took. Kneller's Ship of the Turks.

I chose the later sea, and chanc'd to find

A river's mouth impervious to the wind.

Pope.

CHANCE-MEDLEY, n. f. [from chance and medley. In law.] The casual slaughter of a man, not altogether without the fault of the slayer, when ignorance or negligence is joined with the chance; as if a man lop trees by an highway-side, by which many usually travel, and cast down a bough, not giving warning to take heed thereof, by which bough one passing by is slain; in this case he offends, because he gave no warning, that the party might have taken heed to himself.

Cowell.

If such an one should have the ill hap, at any time, to strike a man dead with a smart saying, it ought, in all reason and conscience, to be judged but a chance-medley.

South.

CHANCEABLE, adj. [from chance.] Accidental.

The trial thereof was cut off by the chanceable coming thither of the king of Iberia.

Sidney.

CHANCEFUL, adj. [chance and full.] Hazardous. Out of use.

Myself would suffer you to accompany
In this adventurous chanceful jeopardy.

Spenser.

CHANCEL, n. f. [from cancelli, Lat. lattices, with which the chancel was enclosed.] The eastern part of the church, in which the altar is placed.

Whether it be allowable or no, that the minister should say service in the chancel.

Hooker.

The chancel of this church is vaulted with a single stone of four feet in thickness, and an hundred and fourteen in circumference.

Addison.

CHANCELLOR, n. f. [cancellarius, Lat. chancellor, Fr. from cancellare, litteras vel scriptum lineâ per medium ductâ dammare; and seemeth of itself likewise to be derived a cancellus, which signify all one with xyphos, a lattice; that is, a thing made of wood or iron bars, laid crossways one over another, so that a man may see through them in and out. It may be thought that judgment seats were compass'd in with bars, to defend the judges and other officers from the press of the multitude, and yet not to hinder any man's view.

Quæritus regni tibi cancellarius Angli, Primus solliciti mente petendus erit.

*Uic est, qui regni leges cancellat iniquas,
Et mandata pii principis æqua facit.*

Verbes of Nigel de Watekre to the bishop of Ely, chancellor to Richard I.]

1. The highest judge of the law.

Cancellarius, at the first, signified the registers or actuaries in court; graphotus, scriba, qui conscribens & excipiens judicium attis dant operam. But this name is greatly advanced, and, not only in other kingdoms but in this, is given to him that is the chief judge in causes of property; for the chancellor hath power to moderate and temper the written law, and subjoeth himself only to the law of nature and conscience.

Cowell.

Turn out, you rogue! how like a beast you lie!
Go, buckle to the law. Is this an hour

To stretch your limbs? you'll ne'er be chancellor.

Dryden jun.

Aristides was a person of the strictest justice, and best acquainted with the laws, as well as forms, of their government; so that he was in a manner, chancellor of Athens.

Swift.

2. CHANCELLOR in the Ecclesiastical Court. A bishop's lawyer; a man trained up in the civil and canon law, to direct the bishops in matters of judgment, relating as well to criminal as to civil affairs in the church.

Ayliffe.

3. CHANCELLOR of a Cathedral. A dignitary whose office it is to superintend the regular exercise of devotion.

4. CHANCELLOR of the Exchequer. An officer who sits in that court, and in the exchequer chamber. He has power, with others, to compound for forfeitures on penal statutes, bonds and recognizances entered into by the king. He has great authority in managing the royal revenue, and in matters of first-fruits. The court of equity is in the exchequer chamber, and is held before the lord treasurer, chancellor, and barons, as that of common law before the barons only.

Cowell. Chambers.

5. CHANCELLOR of an University. The principal magistrate, who at Oxford holds his office during life, but at Cambridge he may be elected every three years.

6. CHANCELLOR of the Order of the Garter, and other military orders, is an officer who seals the commissions and mandates of the chapter and assembly of the knights, keeps the register of their deliberations, and delivers their acts under the seal of the order.

Chambers.

CHANCELLORSHIP, n. f. The office of chancellor.

The Sunday after More gave up his chancellorship of England, he came himself to his wife's pew, and used the usual words of his gentleman-usher, Madam, my lord is gone.

Camden.

CHANCEERY, n. f. [from chancellor; probably chancellery, then shortened.] The court of equity and conscience, moderating the rigour of other courts, that are tied to the letter of the law; whereof the lord chancellor of England is the chief judge, or the lord keeper of the great seal.

Cowell.

The contumacy and contempt of the party must be signified in the court of chancery, by the bishop's letters under the seal episcopal.

Ayliffe.

CHANCER, n. f. [chancre, Fr.] An ulcer usually arising from venereal maladies.

It is possible he was not well cured, and would have relapsed with a chancre.

Wifeman.

CHANCROUS, adj. [from chancre.] Having the qualities of a chancre; ulcerous.

You may think I am too strict in giving so many internals in the cure of so small an ulcer as a chancre, or rather a chancreus callus.

Wifeman.

CHANDELIER, n. f. [chandelier, Fr.] A branch for candles.

CHANDLER, n. f. [chandelier, Fr.] An artisan whose trade it is to make candles, or a person who sells them.

The sack that thou hast drunken me, would have bought me nights as good cheap at the dearest chandlers in Europe. Shakespeare.

But whether black or lighter dyes are worn, The chandler's basket, on his shoulder born, With tallow spots thy coat. Gay.

CHANFRIN. n. f. [old French.] The forepart of the head of a horse, which extends from under the ears, along the interval between the eyebrows, down to his nose. Farrier's Dict.

To CHANGE. v. a. [changer, Fr. can-bia, Lat.]

1. To put one thing in the place of another.

He that cannot look into his own estate, had need choose well whom he employeth; and change them often; for new are more timorous, and less subtle. Bacon's Essays.

2. To quit any thing for the sake of another: with for before the thing taken or received.

Persons grown up in the belief of any religion, cannot change that for another, without applying their understanding duly to consider and compare both. South.

The French and we still change; but here's the curle,

They change for letter, and we change for worse. Dryden.

3. To give and take reciprocally: with the particle with before the person to whom we give, and from whom we take.

To secure thy content, look upon those thousands, with whom thou wouldst not, for any interest, change thy fortune and condition. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

4. To alter; to make other than it was.

Thou shalt not see me blush, Nor change my countenance for this arrest; A heart unpotted is not easily daunted. Shaksp. Whatsoever is brought upon thee, take cheerfully, and be patient when thou art changed to a low estate. Eccles.

For the elements were changed in themselves by a kind of harmony; like as in a psaltery notes change the name of the tune, and yet are always found. Wisdom.

5. To mend the disposition or mind.

I would she were in heaven, so she could Intreat some pow'r to change this curst Jew. Shakspere.

6. To discount a larger piece of money into several smaller.

A shopkeeper might be able to change a guinea, or a moidore, when a customer comes for a crown's worth of goods. Swift.

7. To change a horse, or to change hand, is to turn or bear the horse's head from one hand to the other, from the left to the right, or from the right to the left. Farrier's Dict.

To CHANGE. v. n.

1. To undergo change; to suffer alteration: as, his fortune may soon change, though he is now so secure.

One Julia, that his changing thought forgot, Would better fit his chamber. Shakspere.

2. To change, as the moon; to begin a new monthly revolution.

I am weary of this moon; would he would change. Shakspere.

CHANGE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An alteration of the state of any thing.

Since I saw you last, There is a change upon you. Shakspere.

2. A succession of one thing in the place of another.

O wondrous changes of a fatal scene, Still varying to the last! Dryden.

Nothing can cure this part of ill-breeding, but change and variety of company, and that of persons above us. Locke.

Empires by various turns shall rise and set; While thy abandon'd tribes shall only know A different master, and a change of time. Prior.

Hear how Timotheus' various lays surprise, And bid alternate passions fall and rise! While, at each change, the son of Libyan Jove Now burns with glory, and then melts with love. Pope.

3. The time of the moon in which it begins a new monthly revolution.

Take seeds or roots, and let some of them immediately alter the change, and others of the same kind immediately alter the soil. Bacon.

4. Novelty; a state different from the former.

The hearts Of all his people shall revolt from him, And kiss the lips of unacquainted change. Shaksp. Our fathers did, for change, to France repair; And they, for change, will try our English air. Dryden.

5. [In ringing.] An alteration of the order in which a set of bells is sounded.

Four bells admit twenty-four changes in ringing, and five bells one hundred and twenty. Holler's Elements of Speech.

Easy it may be to contrive new postures, and ring other changes upon the same bells. Norris.

6. That which makes a variety; that which may be used for another of the same kind.

I will now put forth a riddle unto you; if you can find it out, then I will give you thirty sheets, and thirty change of garments. Judges.

7. Small money, which may be given for larger pieces.

Wood buys up our old halfpence, and from thence the present want of change arises; but supposing not one farthing of change in the nation, five-and-twenty thousand pounds would be sufficient. Swift.

8. Change for exchange; a place where persons meet to traffick and transact mercantile affairs.

The bar, the bench, the change, the schools and pulpits, are full of quacks, jugglers, and plagiarists. L'Estrange.

CHANGEABLE. adj. [from change.]

1. Subject to change; fickle; inconstant.

A steady mind will admit steady methods and counsels; there is no measure to be taken of a changeable humour. L'Estrange.

As I am a man, I must be changeable; and sometimes the gravest of us all are so, even upon ridiculous accidents. Dryden.

2. Possible to be changed.

The fibrous or vascular parts of vegetables seem scarce changeable in the alimentary duct. Rebushnot on Aliments.

3. Having the quality of exhibiting different appearances.

Now the taylor make thy doublet of changeable taffeta; for thy mind is a very opal. Shaksp.

CHANGEABLENESS. n. f. [from changeable.]

1. Inconstancy; fickleness.

At length he betrothed himself to one worthy to be liked, if any worthiness might excuse so unworthy a changeableness. Sidney.

There is no temper of mind more unmanly than that changeableness, with which we are too justly branded by all our neighbours. Addison.

2. Susceptibility of change.

If how long they are to continue in force, be no where expressed, then have we no light to direct our judgment concerning the changeableness or immutability of them, but considering the nature and quality of such laws. Hooker.

CHANGEABLY. adv. [from changeable.] Inconstantly.

CHANGEFUL. adj. [from change and full.] Full of change; inconstant; uncertain; mutable; subject to variation; fickle.

Unsound pots, and changeful orders, are daily devised for her good, yet never effectually procured. Spenser.

Britain, changeful as a child at play, Now calls its princes, and now turns away. Pope.

CHANGELING. n. f. [from change.] The word arises from an odd superstitious opinion, that the fairies steal away children, and put others that are ugly and stupid in their places.]

1. A child left or taken in the place of another.

And her base elfin breed there for thee left: Such men do changelings call, so chang'd by fairies theft. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

She, as her attendant, bath

A lovely boy stol'n from an Indian king;

She never had so sweet a changeling. Shakspere.

2. An idiot; a fool; a natural.

Changelings and fools of heav'n, and thence shut out,

Wildly we roam in discontent about. Dryden.

Would any one be a changeling, because he is less determined by wife considerations than a wife man? Locke.

3. One apt to change; a waverrer.

Of fickle changelings and poor discontents, That gape and rub the elbow at the news Of hurly-burly innovation. Shakspere.

'Twas not long

Before from world to world they swung;

As they had turn'd from side to side,

And as they changelings liv'd, they died. Hudibras.

4. Any thing changed and put in the place of another: in ludicrous speech.

I folded the writ up in form of the other, Subscrib'd it, gave the impression, plac'd it safe'y, The changeling never known. Shakspere.

CHANGER. n. f. [from change.] One that is employed in changing or discounting money; moneychanger.

CHANNEL. n. f. [canal, Fr. canalis, Lat.]

1. The hollow bed of running waters.

It is not so easy, now that things are grown into an habit, and have their certain course, to change the channel, and turn their streams another way. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Draw them to Tyber's bank, and weep your tears

Into the channel, till the lowest stream

Do kiss the most exalted shores of all. Shaksp.

So th' injur'd sea, which, from her wonted

course,

To gain some acres, avarice did force;

If the new banks, neglected once, decay,

No longer will from her old channel stay. Waller.

Had not the laid strata been dislocated, some of them elevated, and others depressed, those would have been no cavity or channel to give reception to the water of the sea. Woodward.

The tops of mountains and hills will be continually washed down by the rains, and the channels of rivers abraded by the streams. Bentley.

2. Any cavity drawn longwise.

Complaint and hot desires, the lover's hell, And channel tears, that wore a channel where they fell. Dryden's Fables.

3. A strait or narrow sea, between two countries: as the British Channel, between Britain and France; St. George's Channel, between Britain and Ireland.

4. A gutter or furrow of a pillar.

To CHANNEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

To cut any thing in channels.

Nomore shall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor leavie her flow'ets with the armed hoofs
Of hostile paces. Shakespeare.

The body of this column is perpetually channelled, like a thick plaited gown. Wotton.
Turrents, and loud impetuous cataracls,
Roll down the lofty mountain's channell'd sides,
And to the vale convey their foaming tides. Blackmore.

To CHANT. v. n. To sing; to make melody with the voice.

They chant to the sound of the viol, and invent to themselves instruments of musick. Amos.
Heav'n heard his song, and halloo'd his relief;
And chang'd to snowy plumes his hoary hair,
And wing'd his flight to chant aloft in air. Dryd.

CHANT. n. f. [from the verb.] Song;
melody.

A pleasant grove,
With chant of tuneful birds resounding loud. Milton.

CHA'NTER. n. f. [from chant.] A singer;
a songster.

You curious chanters of the wood,
That warble forth dame Nature's lays. Wotton.
Jove's ethereal lays, scitless fire,
The chanter's soul and raptur'd song inspire,
Instruct divine! nor blame severe his choice,
Warbling the Grecian woes with harp and voice. Pope.

CHA'NTICLEER. n. f. [from chanter and clair, Fr.] The name given to the cock, from the clearness and loudness of his crow.

And cheerful chanticleer, with his note shrill,
Had warn'd once, that Phoebus' fiery ear
In haste was climbing up the eastern hill. Spenser.
Hark, hark, I hear

The strain of strutting chanticleer. Shakespeare.
Stay, the cheerful chanticleer

Tells you that the time is near. Ben Jonson
These verses were mentioned by Chaucer in the description of the sudden stir, and panical fear, when Chanticleer the cock was carried away by Reynard the fox. Camden's Remains.

Within this homestead liv'd without a peer,
For crowing loud, the noble chanticleer. Dryden.

CHA'NTRISS. n. f. [from chant.] A woman singer.

Sweet bird, that thunn'st the noise of folly,
Most musical, most melancholy!
Thou, chantriss of the woods among,
I woo to hear thy even-song. Milton.

CHA'NTRY. n. f. [from chant.] A church or chapel endowed with lands, or other yearly revenue for the maintenance of one or more priests, daily to sing mass for the souls of the donors, and such others as they appoint. Corwell.

Now go with me, and with this holy man,
Into the chantry by;
And, underneath that consecrated roof,
Plight me the full assurance of your faith. Shalf.

CHAOS. n. f. [chaos, Lat. χάος.]

1. The mass of matter supposed to be in confusion before it was divided by the creation into its proper classes and elements.

The whole universe would have been a confused chaos, without beauty or order. Bentley.

2. Confusion; irregular mixture.

Had I followed the world, I could not have brought church and state to such a chaos of confusions, as some have done. K. Charles.

VOL. I.

Their reason sleeps, but mimic fancy wakes, Supplies her parts, and wild ideas takes
From words and things, ill fortet, and misjoin'd;
The anarchy of thought, and chaos of the mind. Dryden.

3. Any thing where the parts are undiftinguished.

We shall have nothing but darkness and a chaos within, whatever order and light there be in things without us. Locke.

Pleas'd with a work, where nothing 's jult or fit,

One glaring chaos and wild heap of wit. Pope.

CHAOTICK. adj. [from chaos.] Refembling chaos; confused.

When the terraqueous globe was in a chaotick state, and the earthy particles subided, then those several beds were, in all probability, repositied in the earth. Derham.

To CHAP. v. a. [kappen, Dutch, to cut.]

This word seems originally the same with chap; nor were they probably distinguished at first, otherwise than by accident; but they have now a meaning something different, though referable to the same original sense.] To break into chaps, or gapings.

It weakened more and more the arch of the earth, drying it immoderately, and chapping it in sundry places. Burnet.

Then would unbalanc'd heat licentious reign,
Crack the dry hill, and chap the sulist plain. Blackmore.

CHAP. n. f. [from the verb.] A cleft; an aperture; an opening; a gaping; a chink.

What moisture the heat of the summer sucks out of the earth, it is repaid in the rains of the next winter; and what chaps are made in it, are filled up again. Burnet's Theory.

CHAP. n. f. [This is not often used, except by anatomists, in the singular.] The upper or under part of a beast's mouth.

Pioth fills his chaps, he sends a grunting sound,
And part he churns, and part befoams the ground. Dryden.

The nether chap in the male skeleton is half an inch broader than in the female. Grew's Museum.

CHAPE. n. f. [chappe, Fr.]

1. The catch of any thing by which it is held in its place; as the hook of a scabbard by which it sticks in the belt; the point by which a buckle is held to the back strap.

This is manifest Parolles, that had the whole theory of the war in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the chape of his dagger. Shalfp.

2. A brass or silver tip or case, that strengthens the end of the scabbard of a sword. Phillips' World of Words.

CHAPEL. n. f. [capella, Lat.] A chapel is of two sorts, either adjoining to a church, as a parcel of the same, which men of worth build; or else separate from the mother church, where the parish is wide, and is commonly called a chapel of ease, because it is built for the ease of one or more parishioners, that dwell too far from the church, and is served by some inferior curate, provided for at the charge of the rector, or of such as have benefit by it, as the composition or custom is. Corwell.

She went in among those few trees, so closed in the tops together, as they might seem a little chapel. Sidney.

Will you dispatch us here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel? Shalfp.

Where truth erecteth her church, he helps error to rear up a chapel hard by. Howel.

A chapel will I build with large endowment. Dryden.

A free chapel is such as is founded by the king of England. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CHAPELESS. adj. [from chape.] Wanting a chape.

An old rusty sword, with a broken hilt, and chapeless, with two broken points. Shalfpeare.

CHAPELLANY. n. f. [from chapel.]

A chapellany is usually said to be that which does not subist of itself, but is built and founded within some other church, and is dependent thereon. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CHAPELRY. n. f. [from chapel.] The jurisdiction or bounds of a chapel.

CHAPERON. n. f. [French.] A kind of hood or cap worn by the knights of the garter in their habits.

I will omit the honourable habiliments, as robes of state, parliament robes, chaperons, and caps of state. Camden.

upper part or capital of a pillar.

He overlaid their chapters and their fillets with gold. Eveland.

CHA'PLAIN. n. f. [capellanus, Latin.]

1. He that performs divine service in a chapel, and attends the king, or other person, for the instruction of him and his family, to read prayers, and preach. Corwell.

Wishing me to permit
John de la Court, my chaplain, a choice hour,
To hear from him a matter of some moment. Shalfpeare.

Chaplain, away! thy priesthood saves thy life. Shalfpeare.

2. One that officiates in domestick worship.
A chief governour can never fail of some worthless illiterate chaplain, fond of a title and precedence. Swift.

CHA'PLAINSHIP. n. f. [from chaplain.]

1. The office or business of a chaplain.

2. The possession or revenue of a chapel.

CHA'PLESS. adj. [from chap.] Without any flesh about the mouth.

Now chapeless, and knocked about the muzzard with a sear's spade. Shalfpeare.

Shut me nightly in a charnel-house,
With rocky shanks and yellow chapeless bones. Shalfpeare.

CHA'PLET. n. f. [chapelet, Fr.]

1. A garland or wreath to be worn about the head.

Upon old Hyem's chin, and icy crown,
An od'rous chapelet of sweet summer's buds,
Is, as in mockery, set. Shalfpeare.

I strangely long to know,
Whether they nobler chapelets wear,
Those that their mistreis' scorn did bear,
Or those that were us'd kindly. Suckling.

All the quire was prac'd
With chapelets green, upon their foreheads plac'd. Dryden.

The winding ivy chapelet to invade;
And folded fern, that your fair forehead shade. Dryden.

They made an humble chapelet for the king. Swift.

2. A string of beads used in the Romish church for keeping an account of the number rehearsed of pater-nosters and ave-marias. A different sort of chapelets is also used by the Mahometans.

3. [In architecture.] A little moulding carved into round beads, pearls, or olives.
4. [In horsemanship.] A couple of stirrup leathers, mounted each of them with a stirrup, and joining at top in a sort of leather buckle, which is called the head of the chaplet, by which they are fastened to the pommel of a saddle, after they have been adjusted to the length and bearing of the rider. Farrier's Dict.

5. A tuft of feathers on the peacock's head.

CHAPMAN. n. f. [ceapman, Sax.] A cheapener; one that offers as a purchaser.

Pair Diomedes, you do as chapmen do,
Dispraise the thing that you intend to buy.

Shakespeare.
Yet have they seen the maps, and bought 'em too,
And understand 'em as most chapmen do.

Ben Jonson.
There was a collection of certain rare manuscripts, exquisitely written in Arabick; these were upon sale to the Jesuits at Antwerp, liquorish chapmen of such wares.

He dressed two, and carried them to Samos,
As the likeliest place for a chapman. L'Estrange.

Their chapmen they betray,
Their shops are dens, the buyer is their prey. Dryden.

CHAPS. n. f. [from chap.]

1. The mouth of a beast of prey.

So on the downs we see
A hasten'd hare from greedy greyhound go,
And past all hope, his chaps to frustrate to.

Sidney.
Open your mouth; you cannot tell who's your friend;
Open your chaps again. Shakespeare.

Their whelps at home expect the promis'd food,
And long to temper their dry chaps in blood. Dryden.

2. It is used in contempt for the mouth of a man.

CHAPT. } The part. pass. of To chap.

CHAPPED. }
Like a table upon which you may run your finger without rubs, and your nail cannot find a joint; not horrid, rough, wrinkled, gaping, or chaps.

Cooling ointment made,
Which on their sun-burnt cheeks and their chaps
Skins they laid. Dryden's Fables.

CHAPTER. n. f. [chapitre, Fr. from capitulum, Lat.]

1. A division of a book.

The first book we divide into three sections;
Whereof the first is these three chapters.

Burner's Theory.
If these mighty men at chapter and verse, can produce then no scripture to overthrow our church ceremonies, I will undertake to produce scripture enough to warrant them. South.

2. From this comes the proverbial phrase, to the end of the chapter; throughout; to the end.

Money does all things: for it gives and it takes away, it makes honest men and knaves, fools and philosophers; and so forward, mutatis mutandis, to the end of the chapter. L'Estrange.

3. Chapter, from capitulum, signifieth, in our common law, as in the canon law, whence it is borrowed, an assembly of the clergy of a cathedral or collegiate church.

The abbot takes the advice and consent of his chapter, before he enters on any matters of importance. Addison on Italy.

4. The place where delinquents receive discipline and correction.

5. A decretal epistle.

6. Chapter-house; the place in which assemblies of the clergy are held.

Though the canonical constitution does strictly require it to be made in the cathedral, yet it matters not where it be made, either in the choir or chapter-house. Arise's Pater-noster.

CHAPTER. n. f. [probably from chapter.] The capitals of pillars, or pilasters, which support arches, commonly called impost.

Let the keystone break without the arch, so much as you project over the jaums with the chapters. Mason.

CHAR. n. f. [of uncertain derivation.] A fith found in Winander mere, in Lancashire, and a few other places.

To CHAR. v. a. [See CHARCOAL.] To burn wood to a black cinder.

Spraywood, in charring, parts into various cracks. Woodward.

CHAR. n. f. [cypne, work, Sax. Lye. It is derived by Skinner, either from charge, Fr. business; or capne, Saxon, care; or keeren, Dutch, to sweep.] Work done by the day; a single job or task.

A meek woman, and commanded
By such poor passion, as the maid that milks,
And does the meanest chairs. Shakespeare.

She, harvest done, to char work did aspire;
Meat, drink, and two-pence, were her daily hire. Dryden.

To CHAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To work at others houses by the day, without being a hired servant.

CHAR-WOMAN. n. f. [from char and woman.] A woman hired accidentally for odd work, or single days.

Get three or four char-women to attend you constantly in the kitchen, whom you pay only with the broken meat, a few coals, and all the cinders. Swift.

CHARACTER. n. f. [character, Lat. χαρακτήρ.]

1. A mark; a stamp; a representation.

In outward also her resembling left
His image, who made both; and left expressing
The character of that dominion giv'n O'er other creatures. Paradise Lost.

2. A letter used in writing or printing.

But his neat cookery—
He cut our roots in characters. Shakespeare.

The purpose is perspicuous, even as substance Whole grossness little characters sum up. Shakespeare.

It were much to be wished, that there were throughout the world but one sort of character for each letter, to express it to the eye; and that exactly proportioned to the natural alphabet formed in the mouth. Hulder's Elements of Speech.

3. The hand or manner of writing.

I found the letter thrown in at the casement of my closet.—You know the character to be your brother's. Shakespeare.

4. A representation of any man as to his personal qualities.

Each drew fair characters, yet none
Of these they feign'd excels their own. Denham.

Homer has excelled all the heroic poets that ever wrote, in the multitude and variety of his characters; every god that is admitted into his poem, acts a part which would have been suitable to no other deity. Addison.

5. An account of any thing as good or bad.

This subterraneous passage is much mended, since Seneca gave so bad a character of it. Addison on Italy.

6. The person with his assemblage of qualities; a personage.

In a tragedy, or epic poem, the hero of the piece must be advanced foremost to the view of the reader or spectator; he must outline the test of all the characters; he must appear the prince of them, like the sun in the Copernican system, encompassed with the less noble planets. Dryden.

7. Personal qualities; particular constitution of the mind.

Nothing so true as what you once let fall,
Most women have no characters at all. Pope.

8. Adventitious qualities impressed by a post or office.

The chief honour of the magistrate consists in maintaining the dignity of his character by suitable actions. Atterbury.

To CHARACTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To inscribe; to engrave. It seems to have had the accent formerly on the second syllable.

Their new precepts in thy memory
See thou character. Shakespeare.

Show me one character of him thy skin. Shakespeare.

O Rosalind! these trees shall be my books,
And in their barks my thoughts I'll character. Shakespeare.

The pleasing poison
The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,
And the inglorious likeness of a beast
Fixes instead, unshouling reason's mintage, Character'd in the face. Milton.

CHARACTERISTICAL. } adj. [from characterize.]
CHARACTERISTICK. } That constitutes the character, or marks the peculiar properties, of any person or thing.

There are several others that I take to have been likewise such, to which yet I have not ventured to prefix that characteristick distinction. Woodward on Fossils.

The shining quality of an epic hero, his magnanimity, his constancy, his patience, his piety, or whatever characteristical virtue his poet gives him, raises our admiration. Dryden.

CHARACTERISTICALNESS. n. f. [from characteristical.] The quality of being peculiar to a character; marking a character.

CHARACTERISTICK. n. f. That which constitutes the character; that which distinguishes any thing or person from others.

This vast invention exerts itself in Homer, in a manner superior to that of any poet; it is the great and peculiar characteristick which distinguishes him from all others. Pope.

CHARACTERISTICK of a Logarithm. The same with the index or exponent.

To CHARACTERIZE. v. a. [from character.]

1. To give a character or an account of the personal qualities of any man.

It is some commendation, that we have avoided publicly to characterize any person, without long experience. Swift.

2. To engrave, or imprint.

They may be called anticipations, premonitions, or sentiments characterized and engraven in the soul, born with it, and growing up with it. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. To mark with a particular stamp or token.

There are faces not only individual, but genititious and national; European, Asiatick, Chinese, African, and Grecian faces are characterized. Arbuthnot on Art.

CHARACTERLESS. adj. [from character.] Without a character.

When water-drops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grac'd
To dusty nothing. Shakespeare.

CHARACTER. n. f. [from character.]

Impression; mark; distinction: accented anciently on the second syllable.

Fairies use flowers for their character. Shaks.
All my engagements I will contrive to thee,
All the character of my sad brows. Shaks.

CHARCOAL. n. f. [imagined by Skinner to be derived from char, business; but, by Lye, from To char, to burn.] Coal made by burning wood under turf. It is used in preparing metals.

Seacoal lasts longer than charcoal; and charcoal of roots, being coaled into great pieces, lasts longer than ordinary charcoal. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Love is a fire that burns and sparkles
In men as naturally as in charcoal,
Which sooty chymists stop in holes,
When out of wood they extract coals. Hudibras.
Is there who, lock'd from ink and paper, scrawls
With desperate charcoal round his darken'd walls? Pope

CHARD. n. f. [charde, French.]

1. Chards of artichokes, are the leaves of fair artichoke plants, tied and wrapped up all over but the top, in straw, during the autumn and winter; this makes them grow white, and lose some of their bitterness. Chambers.

2. Chards of beet, are plants of white beet transplanted, producing great tops, which, in the midl, have a large, white, thick, downy, and cotton-like main shoot which is the true chard. Mortimer.

TO CHARGE. v. a. [charger, Fr. carisare, Ital. from carus, Lat.]

1. To entrust; to commission for a certain purpose: it has with before the thing entrusted.

And the captain of the guard charged Joseph with them, and he served them. Genesis.
What you have charged me with, that I have done. Shakspeare.

2. To impute as a debt: with on before the debtor.

My father's, mother's, brother's death I pardon:
That's somewhat sure; a mighty sum of murder,
Of innocent and kindred blood struck off:
My prayers and penance shall discount for these,
And beg of Heaven to charge the bill on me. Dryden.

3. To impute: with on before the person to whom any thing is imputed.

No more accuse thy pen, but charge the crime
On native sloth, and negligence of time. Dryden.
It is easy to account for the difficulties he charges on the prepatist doctrine. Locke.
It is not barely the ploughman's pains; the reaper's and thresher's toil, and the baker's sweat, to be counted into the bread we eat; the pough, mill, oven, or any other utensils, must all be charged on the account of labour. Locke.
Perverse mankind! whole wills, created I say, charge all their woes on absolute decree;
All to the dooming gods their guilt translate,
And follies are miscall'd the errors of fate. Pope.
We charge that upon necessity, which was really desired and chosen. Watts' Logic.

4. To impute to, as cost or hazard.

He was so great an encourager of commerce, that he charged himself with all the sea risk of such vessels as carried corn to Rome in winter. A discourse on Coins.

5. To impute as a task: it has with before the thing imposed.

The gospel chargeth us with piety towards God, and justice and charity to men, and temperance and chastity in reference to ourselves. Johnson.

6. To accuse; to censure.

Speaking thus to you, I am so far from charging you as guilty in this matter, that I can honestly say, I believe the exhortation wholly needless. White's Preparation for Death.

7. To accuse: it has with before the crime.

And his angels be charged with folly. Job.

8. To challenge.

The priest shall charge her by an oath. Numb.
Thou canst not, cardinal, devise a name
So slight, unworthy, and ridiculous,
To charge me to an answer as the pope. Shaks.

9. To command; to enjoin.

I may not suffer you to visit them;
The king hath strictly charg'd the contrary. Shaks.
Why dost thou turn thy face? I charge thee, answer
To what I shall enquire. Dryden.

I charge thee, stand,
And tell thy name, and business in the land. Dryden.

10. To fall upon; to attack.

With his prepared sword he charges home
My unprovided body, lanc'd my arm. Shaks.
The Grecians rally, and their powers unite;
With fury charge us, and renew the fight. Dryd.

11. To burden; to load.

Here's the smell of blood still; all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand.
Oh! oh!—What a sight is there! The heart is sorely charged. Shakspeare.

When often urg'd, unwilling to be great,
Your country calls you from your low'd retreat,
And sends to senate, charg'd with common care,
Which none more shuns, and none can better bear. Dryden.

Meat swallowed down for pleasure and greediness, only charges the stomach, or fumes into the brain. Temple.

A fault in the ordinary method of education, is the charging of children's memories with rules and precepts. Locke.

The brief with weighty crimes was charg'd,
On which the pleader much enlarg'd. Swift.

12. To cover with something adventitious.

It is pity the obelisks in Rome had not been charged with several parts of the Egyptian histories, instead of hieroglyphicks. Addison on Italy.

13. To fix, as for fight. Obsolete.

CHARGE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Care; custody; trust to defend.

A hard division, when the harmless sheep
Must leave their lambs to hungry wolves in charge. Fairfax.

He enquired many things, as well concerning the princes which had the charge of the city, whether they were in hope to defend the same. Kneller's History of the Turks.

2. Precept; mandate; command.

Saul might even lawfully have offered to God those reserved spoils, had not the Lord, in that particular case, given special charge to the contrary. Hooker.

It is not for nothing, that St. Paul giveth charge to beware of philosophy; that is to say, such knowledge as men by natural reason attain unto. Hooker.

One of the Turks laid down letters upon a stone, laying, that in them was contained that they had in charge. Kneller.

The leaders having charge from you to stand, Will not go off until they hear you speak. Shaks.

He, who requires
From us no other service than to keep
This one, this easy charge; of all the trees
In Paradise, that bear delicious fruit
So various, not to taste but only tree
Of knowledge, planted by the tree of life. Milton.

3. Commission; trust conferred; office.

If large possessions, pompous titles, honourable charges, and profitable commissions, could have made this proud man happy, there would have been nothing wanting. L'Estrange.

Go first the matter of thy herds to find,
True to his charge, a loyal swain and kind. Pope.

4. It had anciently sometimes over before the thing committed to trust.

I gave my brother charge over Jerusalem; for he was a faithful man, and feared God above many. Nehemiah.

5. It has of before the subject of command or trust.

Hast thou eaten of the tree,
Whereof I gave thee charge thou should'st not eat? Milton.

6. It has upon before the person charged.

He loves God with all his heart, that is, with that degree of love, which is the highest point of our duty, and of God's charge upon us. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

7. Accusation; imputation.

We need not lay new matter to his charge:
Beating your officers, cursing yourselves. Shaks.
These very men are continually reproaching the clergy, and laying to their charge the pride, the avarice, the luxury, the ignorance, and superstition of popish times. Swift.

8. The person or thing entrusted to the care or management of another.

Why hast thou, Satan, broke the bounds prescribed

To thy transgressions, and disturb'd the charge Of others? Milton's Paradise Lost.

More had he said, but, fearful of her stay,
The starry guardian drove his charge away.
To some fresh pasture. Dryden.

Our guardian angel saw them where they sat
Above the palace of our slumbering king;
He sigh'd, abandoning his charge to fate. Dryden.

This part should be the governor's principal care; that an habitual gracefulness and politeness, in all his carriage, may be settled in his charge, as much as may be, before he goes out of his hands. Locke.

9. An exhortation of a judge to a jury, or bishop to his clergy.

The bishop has recommended this author in his charge to the clergy. Dryden.

10. Expence; cost.

By thee,
Founded in reason, loyal, just, and pure,
Relations dear, and all the charities
Of father, son, and brother, first were known. Milton.

2. Good-will; benevolence; disposition to think well of others.

My errors, I hope, are only those of charity to mankind; and such as my own charity has caused me to commit; that of others may more easily excuse. Dryden.

3. The theological virtue of universal love.

Concerning charity, the final object whereof is that incomprehensible beauty which shineth in the countenance of Christ, the Son of the living God. Hosker.

Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity.—
Urge neither charity nor shame to me;
Uncharitably with me have you dealt. Shak.

Only add
Deeds to thy knowledge answerable; add faith,
Add virtue, patience, temperance; add love,
By name to come call'd charity, the soul
Of all the rest. Milton.

Faith believes the revelations of God; hope expects his promises; charity loves his excellencies and mercies. Taylor.

But lasting charity's more ample sway
Nor bound by time, nor subject to decay,
In happy triumph shall for ever live. Prior.

Charity, or a love of God, which works by a love of our neighbour, is greater than faith or hope. Atterbury.

4. Liberality to the poor.

The heathen poet, in commending the charity of Dido to the Trojans, spoke like a christian. Dryden.

5. Alms; relief given to the poor.

We must incline to the king; I will look for him, and privately relieve him; go you and maintain talk with the duke, that my charity be not of him perceived. Shakespeare.

The ant did well to reprove the grasshopper for her foolishness; but she did ill then to refuse her a charity in her distress. L'Esrange.

I never had the confidence to beg a charity. Dryden.

To CHARK. v. a. To burn to a black cinder, as wood is burned to make charcoal.

Well sounding verses are the charm we use,
Heroick thoughts and virtue to infuse. Rosson.

Nor ever hope the queen of love

Will e'er thy rav'nite's charms improve. Prior.

To fam'd Apelles when young Ammon brought

The darling idol of his captive heart;

And the pleas'd nymph with kind attention sat,

To have her charms recorded by his art. Waller.

But what avail her unexhausted stores,

Her blooming mountains, and her sunny shores,

With all the gifts that heaven and earth impart,

The smiles of nature, and the charms of art,

While proud oppression in her valleys reigns,

And tyranny usurps her happy plains? Adison.

To CHARM. v. a. [from the noun.]

For ever all goodness will be charming, for ever all wickedness will be most odious. Spenser.

O charming youth! in the first opening page,

So many graces in so green an age. Dryden.

CHA'RMINGLY. adv. [from charming.] In such a manner as to please exceedingly.

She smiled very charmingly, and discovered as fine a set of teeth as ever eye beheld. Addison.

CHA'RMINGNESS. n. f. [from charming.]

The power of pleasing.

CHA'RMEL. adj. [charmél, Fr.] Containing flesh, or carcases.

Such are those thick and gloomy shadows damp,

Of found in charnel vaults and sepulchres

Ling'ring, and sitting by a new made grave. Milton.

CHA'RMEL-HOUSE. n. f. [charnier, Fr.

from caro, carnis, Latin.] The place under churches where the bones of the dead are repositied.

If charnel-houses and our graves must send

Those, that we bury, back; our monuments

Shall be the maws of kites. Shakespeare.

When they were in those charnel-houses, every one was placed in order, and a black pillar or coffin set by him. Taylor.

CHART. n. f. [charta, Lat.] A delineation or map of coasts, for the use of failors. It is distinguished from a map, by representing only the coasts.

The Portuguese, when they had doubled the Cape of Good Hope, found skilful pilots, using astronomical instruments, geographical charts, and compasses. Arbutnot.

CHARTER. n. f. [charta, Latin.]

1. A charter is a written evidence of things done between man and man. Charters are divided into charters of the king, and charters of private persons. Charters of the king are those, whereby the king passeth any grant to any person or more, or to any body politick: as a charter of exemption, that no man shall be empan-nelled on a jury; charter of pardon, whereby a man is forgiven a felony,

or other offence. Cowell.

2. Any writing bestowing privileges or rights.

If you deny it, let the danger light

Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shak.

It is not to be wondered, that the great charter whereby God bestowed the whole earth upon

Adam, and confirmed it unto the sons of Noah, being as brief in word as large in effect, hath bred much quarrel of interpretation. Raleigh's Essays.

Here was that charter seal'd, wherein the crown

All marks of arbitrary power lays down. Deane.

She shakes the rubbish from her mounting-brow,

And seems to have renew'd her charter's date,

Which heav'n will to the death of time allow. Dryden.

God renewed this charter of man's sovereignty over the creatures. South.

3. Privilege; immunity; exemption.

I must have liberty,

Withal as large a charter as the wind,

To blow on whom I please; for so fools have;

And they that are most galled with my folly,

They mock most laugh. Shakespeare.

My mother,

Who has a charter to extol her blood,

When she does praise me, grieves me. Shakspeare.

CHARTER-PARTY. n. f. [chartre partie,

Fr.] A paper relating to a contract,

of which each party has a copy.

Charter-parties, or contracts, made even upon the high sea, touching things that are not in their own nature maritime, belong not to the admiral's jurisdiction. Hale.

CHARTERED. adj. [from charter.] Invested with privileges by charter; privilleged.

When he speaks,

The air, a charter'd libertine, is still. Shakspeare.

CHARY. adj. [from care.] Careful; cautious; wary; frugal.

Over his kindred he held a wary and chary care, which bountifully was capricious, when occasion so required. Cassius's Survey of Cornwall.

The charied mind is promiscuous enough,

If the unmask her beauty to the moon. Shakspeare.

To CHASE. v. a. [chasser, French.]

1. To hunt.

It shall be as the chased roe. Isaiah.

My enemies chase me sore like a bird. Lamentations.

2. To pursue as an enemy.

And Ahimelech chased him, and he fled before him. Judges.

One of you shall chase a thousand. Deut.

3. To drive away.

He that chaseth away his mother, is a son that causeth shame. Proverbs.

4. To follow as a thing desirable.

5. To drive.

Thus chased by their brother's endless malice

from prince to prince, and from place to place, they, for their safety, fled at last to the city of Buenos. Andrieu's History of the Turks.

When the following moon had chas'd away

The flying stars, and light restor'd the day. Dryden.

To CHASE Metals. See To ENCHASE.

CHASE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Hunting; as, the pleasures of the chase.

2. Pursuit of any thing as game.

Whilst he was halting in the chase, it seems,

Of this fair couple, meet he on the way

The father of this seeming lady. Shakespeare.

There is no chase more pleasant, methinks, than to drive a thought, by good conduct, from one end of the world to another, and never to lose sight of it till it fall into eternity. Burnet.

3. Fitness to be hunted; appropriation to chase or sport.

Concerning the beasts of chase, whereof the beast is the first, he is called the first year a fawn. Shakespeare.

A maid I am, and of thy virgin train;

Oh! let me still that spotless name retain,

Frequent the forests, thy chase will obey,

And only make the beads of chase my prey. Dryden.

4. Pursuit of an enemy, or of something noxious.

The admiral, with such ships only as could suddenly be put in readiness, made forth with them, and such as came daily in, we set upon them, and gave them chase. Bacon.

He sallied out upon them with certain troops of horsemen, with such violence, that he overthrew them, and, having them in chase, did speedy execution. Kneller's History of the Turks.

They seek that joy, which us'd to glow

Expos'd on the hero's face,

When the thick squadrons press the foe,

And William led the glorious chase. Prior.

5. Pursuit of something as desirable.

Yet this mad chase, of fame, by few pursued,

Has drawn destruction on the multitude. Dryden.

6. The game hunted.

She, seeing the towering of her pursued chase, went circling about, rising so with the hel's tents of rising. Sidney.

Hold, Warwick! seek thee out some other chase,

For I myself must put this deer to death. Shakspeare.

Honour's the noblest chase; pursue that game,

And recompense the loss of love with fame. Granville.

7. Open ground stored with such beasts as are hunted.

A receptacle for deer and game, of a middle nature between a forest and a park: being commonly less than a forest, and not endued with so many liberties; and yet of a larger compass, and stored with greater diversity of game, than a park. A chase differs from a forest in this, because it may be in the hands of a subject, whereas a forest, in its proper nature, cannot: and from a park, in that it is not inclosed, and hath not only a larger compass, and more store of game, but likewise more keepers and overseers. Cowell.

He and his lady both are at the lodge,
Upon the north side of this pleasant chase. Shaksp.

8. The CHASE of a gun, is the whole bore or length of a piece, taken within side.

Chambers.

CHASE-GUN. n. f. [from chase and gun.] Guns in the forepart of the ship, fired upon those that are pursued.

Mean time the Belgians tack upon our rear,
And taking chase-guns through our stern they send. Dryden.

CHASER. n. f. [from chase.]

1. Hunter; pursuer; driver.

Then began

A stop 't' th' chaser, a retire; anon
-A rout, confusion thick. Shaksp.

So fast he flies, that his reviewing eye
Has lost the chasers, and his ear the cry. Denb.

Stretch'd on the lawn, his second hope survey,
At once the chaser, and at once the prey!

Lo, Rufus, tugging at the deadly dart, Bleeds in the forest like a wounded hart! Pope.

2. An enchafer.

CHASM. n. f. [χάσμα.]

1. A breach unclosed; a cleft; a gap; an opening.

In all that visible corporeal world, we see no
chasms or gaps. Locke.

The water of this orb communicates with that of the ocean, by means of certain hiatuses or chasms passing betwixt it and the bottom of the ocean. Woodward.

The ground about her riv'n mouth disparts,
Horrible chasm profound. Philips.

2. A place unfilled; a vacancy.

Some lazy ages, lost in ease,
No action leave to busy chronicles;
Such, whose supine felicity but makes
In story chasms in epochas mistakes. Dryden.

CHASSELAS. n. f. [French.] A sort of grape.

CHASTE. adi. [castus, Fr. castus, Lat.]

1. Pure from all commerce of sexes; as, a chaste virgin.

Diana chaste, and Hebe fair. Prior.

2. With respect to language, pure; uncorrupt; not mixed with barbarous phrases.

3. Free from obscenity.

Among words which signify the same principal ideas, some are clean and decent, others unclean; some chaste, others obscene. Watts' Logic.

4. True to the marriage bed.

Love your children; be discreet, chaste, keepers at home. Titus.

CHASTE-TREE. n. f. [vitex, Lat.]

This tree will grow to be eight or ten feet high, and produce spikes of flowers at the extremity of every young shoot in autumn. Miller.

CHASTELY. adv. [from chaste.] Without incontinence; purely; without contamination.

You should not pass here; no, though it were as virtuous to lie as to live chastely. Shaksp.

Make first a font of joy and love,
Whence chastely flows in royal eyes. Wotton.

Suppression of a long detect,
Which chastely in the council van,
And then our damsel's began. Dryden.

To CHASTEN. v. a. [castigari, Fr. castigo, Lat.] To correct; to punish; to mortify.

Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare for his crying. Prauerb.

I follow thee, safe guide! the path
Thou lead'st me, and to the hand of heav'n submit.

However chast'ning. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Some feel the rod,
And own, like us, the father's chast'ning hand. Renn.

From our lost pursuit the will to hide
Her close decrees, and chasten human pride. Prior.

To CHASTISE. v. a. [castigo, Lat. anciently accented on the first syllable, now on the last.]

1. To punish; to correct by punishment; to afflict for faults.

My breath I'll burst with straining of my courage,

But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet. Shaksp.

I am glad to see the vanity or envy of the canting chymists thus discovered and chastised. Boyle.

Seldom is the world affrighted or chastised with signs or prodigies, earthquakes or inundations, famines or plagues. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

Like you, commission'd to chastise and bless,
He must avenge the world, and give it peace. Prior.

2. To reduce to order, or obedience; to repress; to restrain; to awe.

Hie thee hither,

That I may pour my spirits in thine ear,
And chastise, with the valour of my tongue,
All that impedes thee. Shaksp.

Know sir, that I
Will not wait pinion'd at your master's court,
Nor once be chastis'd with the sober eye
Of dull Octavia. Shaksp.

The gay social sense
By decency chastis'd. Thomson.

CHASTISEMENT. n. f. [castigamentum, Fr.]

Correction; punishment: commonly, though not always, used of domestic or parental punishment.

Shall I so much dishonour my fair state,
On equal terms to give him chastisement? Shaksp.

He held the chastisement of one, which molested the fee of Rome, pleasing to God. Raleigh.

For seven years what can a child be guilty of,
but lying, or ill-natured tricks; the repeated commission of which shall bring him to the chastisement of the rod. Locke.

He receives a fit of sickness as the kind chastise-ment and discipline of his heavenly Father, to wean his affections from the world. Bentley.

CHASTISER. n. f. [from chastise.] The person that chastises; a punisher; a corrector.

CHASTITY. n. f. [castitas, Lat.]

1. Purity of the body.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow

To force a spotless virgin's chastity? Shaksp.

Chastity is either abstinence or continence: abstinence is that of virgins or widows; continence of married persons: chaste marriages are honourable and pleasing to God. Taylor.

Lo'n here, where frozen chastity retires,
Love finds an altar for sublimed fires. Pope.

2. Freedom from obscenity.

There is not chastity enough in language,

Whom offence to utter them. Shaksp.

3. Freedom from bad mixture of any kind; purity of language, opposed to barbarisms.

CHASTNESS. n. f. [from chaste.] Chastity; purity.

To CHAT. v. n. [from caqueter, Fr. Skinner.] perhaps from achat, purchase or cheapening, on account of the prate naturally produced in a bargain; or only, as it is most likely, contracted from chatter.] To prate; to talk idly; to prattle; to cackle; to chatter; to converse at ease.

Thus chatten the people in their flocks,
Ylike as a monster of many heads. Spenser.

Because that I familiarly sometimes
Do use you for my fool, and chat with you,

Your fauciness will jet upon my love. Shaksp.

The shepherds on the lawn
Sat simply chattering in a rustic row. Milton.

With much good-will the motion was embrac'd
To chat a while on their adventures past. Dryden.

To CHAT. v. a. To talk of. Not in use, unless ludicrously.

All tongues speak of him, and the bleared fights

Are spectacled to see him. Your prattling nurse
Into a rapture lets her baby cry,

While she chats him, Shaksp.

CHAT. n. f. [from the verb.] Idle talk; prate; slight or negligent tattle.

Lords that can prate

As amply and unnecessarily

As this Gonzalo, I myself would make

A clough of as deep chat. Shaksp.

The time between before the fire they sat

And shorten'd the delay by pleasing chat. Dryd.

The least is good, far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine, or the idle chat of a smoking club. Locke.

Snuff, or the fan, supplies each pause of chat,
With singing, laughing, ogling, and all that. Pope.

CHAT. n. f. The keys of trees are called chats; as, ash chats.

CHA'TELLANY. n. f. [châtelanie, Fr.] The district under the dominion of a castle.

Here are about twenty towns and forts of great importance, with their châtellenies and dependencies. Dryden.

CHA'TTEL. n. f. [See CATTLE.] Any moveable possession: a term now scarce used but in forms of law.

Nay, look not big, nor stamp, nor stare, nor fret;

I will be master of what is mine own;

She is my goods, my chattels. Shaksp.

Honour 'sa haste for love to come,

And cannot be extended from

The legal tenant; 'tis a chattel

Not to be forfeited in battle. Hudibras.

To CHATTER. v. n. [caqueter, Fr.]

1. To make a noise as a pic, or other unharmonious bird.

Nightingales seldom sing, the pie still chattereth. Milner.

So doth the cuckoo, when the mavis sings,
Begin his wile's note apace to chatter. Spenser.

There was a crow sat chattering upon the back of a sheep: Well, sirrah, says the sheep, you durst not have done this to a dog. L'Estrange.

Your bird of knowledge, that in dusky air Chatters sutorily. Dryden.

2. To make a noise by collision of the teeth.

Stout Chatter surpris'd in deadly night,
With chattering teeth, and beaming hair upright. Dryden.

Dip but your toes into cold water,
Their correspondent teeth will chatter. Prior.

3. To talk idly or carelessly.

Suffer no hour to pass away in a lazy idleness, an impertinent chattering, or useless trifling. Watts' Logic.

CHATTER. n. f. [from the verb.]

So mightily recompence your beauty bought. Dryden.

CHEAPNESS. n. f. [from cheap.] Low-ness of price.
Ancient statutes incite merchant-strangers to bring in commodities; having for end cheapness. Bacon.
The discredit which is grown upon Ireland, has been the great discouragement to other nations to transplant themselves hither, and prevailed farther than all the invitations which the cheapness and plenty of the country has made them. Temple.

CHEAT. See CHEER.

TO CHEAT. v. a. [of uncertain derivation; probably from acheater, Fr. to purchase, alluding to the tricks used in making bargains. See the noun.]

1. To defraud; to impose upon; to trick. It is used commonly of low cunning.
It is a dangerous commerce, where an honest man is sure at first of being cheated; and he recovers not his losses, but by learning to cheat others. Dryden.
There are people who find that the most effectual way to cheat the people, is always to pretend to infallible cures. Tillotson.

2. It has of before the thing taken away by fraud.
I that am curtail'd by this fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd. Shakespeare.

CHEAT. n. f. [from the verb. Some think abbreviated from eschent, because many fraudulent measures being taken by the lords of manors in procuring eschents, cheat, the abridgment, was brought to convey a bad meaning.]

1. A fraud; a trick; an imposture.
The pretence of publick good is a cheat that will ever pass, though foisted by ill men, that I wonder the good do not grow ashamed to use it. Temple.
Empirick politicians use deceit,
Hide what they give, and cure but by a cheat. Dryden.
When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;
Yet, fool'd with hope, men favour the deceit;
Till on, and think to-morrow will repay;
To-morrow's falser than the former day;
Lies worse; and while it says we shall be blest
With some new joy, cuts off what we possess. Dryden.

2. A person guilty of fraud.
Disimulation can be no further useful than it is concealed; for as much as no man will trust a known cheat. South.
Like that notorious cheat, vast sums I give,
Only that you may keep me while I live. Dryden.

CHE

CHEATER. n. f. [from cheat.] One that practises fraud.
I will be cheater to them both, and they shall be exchequers to me. [It is here for cheater] Shakespeare.
They say this town is full of couzenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye;
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like liberties of sin. Shakespeare.
He is no swaggerer, buffets; a tame cheater i'faith.—Cheater, call you him? I will bar no honest man my house, nor no cheater. Shakespeare.
All sorts of injurious persons, the fraudulent, the detainers of titles, cheaters of men's inheritances, false witnesses and accusers.
Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

TO CHECK. v. a. [from the French acheer, chefs; whence we use at that game, the term checkmate, when we stop our adversary from carrying on his play any further.]

1. To repress; to curb.
Refrain thy state; with better judgment check This hideous rashness. Shakespeare.
Fames may be fown and raised, they may be spread and multiplied, they may be checked and laid dead. Bacon.
I note when vice can bolt her arguments,
And virtue has no tongue to check her pride. Milton.
He who sat at a table, richly and deliciously furnished, but with a sword hanging over his head by one single thread or hair, surely had enough to check his appetite. South.

2. To reprove; to chide.
Richard, with his eye brimful of tears,
Then check'd and rated by Northumberland,
Did speak these words, now prov'd a prophecy. Shakespeare.

CHESTNUT. n. f. [from chastaigne, Fr.]

CHESTNUT-TREE. n. f. [from chastanea, Latin.]

1. The tree hath katkins, which are placed at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree. The outer coat of the fruit is very rough, and has two or three nuts included in each husk or covering. This tree was formerly in greater plenty, as may be proved by the old buildings in London, which were, for the most part, of this timber; which is equal in value to the best oak, and, for many purposes, far exceeds it, particularly for making vessels for liquors; it having a property, when once thoroughly seasoned, to maintain its bulk constantly, and is not subject to shrink or swell, like other timber. Miller.

2. The fruit of the chestnut tree.

A woman's tongue,
That gives not half so great a blow to th' ear,
As will a chestnut in a farmer's fire. Shakespeare.

CHE

October has a basket of services, medlars, and chymists, and fruits that ripen at the latter time. Peacham on Drawing.

3. The name of a brown colour.

His hair is of a good colour.

—An excellent colour: your chestnut was ever the only colour. Shakespeare.

Seldom, laid Guyon, yields to virtue aid. Spens.

CHEVRON. n. f. [French.] One of the honourable ordinaries in heraldry. It represents two rafters of a house, set up as they ought to stand. Harris.

To CHEW. v. a. [ceppyan, Sax. kauwen, Dutch. It is very frequently pronounced chaw, and perhaps properly.]

1. To grind with the teeth; to masticate.

If little faults, proceeding from distemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested, Appear before us? Shakespeare.

Pacing through the forest,

Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy. Shak.

This pious cheat, that never suck'd the blood,

Nor chew'd the flesh, of lambs. Dryden's Fables.

The vales

Descending gently, where the lowing herd

Chews verd'ant pasture. Philips.

By chewing, solid aliment is divided into small parts: in a human body, there is no other instrument to perform this action but the teeth.

By the action of chewing, the spittle and mucus are squeezed from the glands, and mixed with the aliment; which action, if it be long continued, will turn the aliment into a sort of chyle. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To meditate; to ruminate in the thoughts.

While the fierce monk does at his trial stand,
He chews revenge, abjuring his offence:

Guile in his tongue, and murder in his hand,

He stabs his judge, to prove his innocence. Prior.

3. To taste without swallowing.

Heaven 's in my mouth,

As if I did but only chew its name. Shakespeare.

Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested: that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiously; and some few to be read wholly, with attention. Bacon.

To CHEW. v. n. To champ upon; to ruminate.

I will with patience hear, and find a time;
Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this. Shakespeare.

Old politicians chew on wisdom past,
And blunder on in business to the last. Pope.

CHICANE. n. f. [chicane, Fr. derived by Menage from the Spanish word chico, little.]

1. The art of protracting a contest by petty objection and artifice.

The general part of the civil law concerns not the chicane of private causes, but the affairs and intercourse of civilized nations, grounded upon the principles of reason. Locke.

His attornies have hardly one trick left; they are at an end of all their chicane. Arbuthnot.

2. Artifice in general. This sense is only in familiar language.

Unwilling then in arms to meet,
He strove to lengthen the campaign,
And save his forces by chicane. Prior.

To CHICANE. v. n. [chicaner, Fr.] To prolong a contest by tricks.

CHICANER. n. f. [chicaneur, Fr.] A petty sophist; a trifling disputant; a wrangler.

This is the way to distinguish the two most different things I know, a logical chicaner from a man of reason. Locke.

CHICANERY. n. f. [chicanerie, Fr.] Sophistry; mean arts of wrangle.

His anger caused him to destroy the greatest part of these reports; and only to preserve such as discovered much of the chicanery and futility of the practice. Arbuthnot.

1. The young of a bird, particularly of a hen, or small bird.

All my pretty ones!

What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,

At one fell swoop! Shakespeare.

For when the shell is broke, out comes a chick. Davies.

While it is a chick, and hath no spurs, nor cannot hurt, nor hath seen the motion, yet he readily practiseth it. Hale.

Even since she was a seven-night old, they say,

Was chaste and humble to her dying day;

Nor chick, nor hen, was known to dishevel. Dryden.

Having the notion that one laid the egg out of which the other was hatched, I have a clear idea of the relation of dam and chick. Locke.

On rainy days alone I dine,

Upon a chick and pint of wine:

On rainy days I dine alone,

And pick my chicken to the bone. Swift.

2. A word of tenderness.

My Ariel, chick,

This is thy charge. Shakespeare.

3. A term for a young girl.

Then, Chloe, still go on to prate

Of thirty-six and thirty-eight;

Pursue your trade of scandal-picking,

Your hints, that Stella is no chicken. Swift.

CHICKENHEARTED. adj. [from chicken and heart.] Cowardly; timorous; fearful.

Now we set up for tilting in the pit,
Where 'tis agreed by bullies, chickenhearted,
To fright the ladies first, and then be parted.

Prologue to Spanish Friar.

CHICKENPOX. n. f. An exanthematous distemper, so called from its being of no very great danger.

chief in this trespass.

Ezra.

Your country, chief in arms, abroad defend;
At home, with morals, arts, and laws amend.

Pope.

2. Eminent; extraordinary.

A froward man soweth strife, and a whisperer
separateth chief friends.

Proverbs.

3. Capital; of the first order; that to which other parts are inferior, or subordinate.

I came to have a good general view of the apostle's main purpose in writing the epistle, and the chief branches of his discourse wherein he prosecuted it.

Locke.

4. It is used by some writers with a superlative termination; but, I think, improperly: the comparative chief is never found.

We beseech you, bend you to remain
Here in the cheer and comfort of our eye,
Our chiefest courtier, cousin, and our son. Shaksp.
Doeg an Edomite, the chiefest of the herdmen.

1 Samuel.

He sometimes denied admission to the chiefest officers of the army.

Clarendon.

CHIEF. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A military commander; a leader of armies; a captain.

Is pain to them
Less pain, less to be fled? or thou than they Less hardy to endure? courageous chief!
The first in flight from pain.

Milton.

After or before were never known
Such chiefs; as each an army seem'd alone.

Dryden.

A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod;
An honest man's the noblest work of God.

Pope.

A prudent chief not always must display
His pow'rs in equal ranks, and fair array;
But with th' occasion and the place comply,
Conceal his force, nay seem sometimes to fly.

Pope.

2. In CHIEF, in law. In capite, by personal service.

All sums demandable, either for licence of alienation to be made of lands holden in chief, or for the pardon of any such alienation already made without licence, have been stayed in the way to the hanaper.

Bacon.

I shall be proud to hold my dependance on you in chief, as I do part of my small fortune in Wiltshire.

Dryden.

3. In Spenser it seems to signify somewhat like achievement; a mark of distinction.

Where be the nosegays that the dight for thee?
The coloured chaplets wrought with a chief,
The knottish rush-rings, and gilt rosemary?

Spenser.

4. In heraldry.

The chief is so called of the French word chef, the head or upper part: this possesses the upper third part of the escutcheon.

Peucham.

CHIEFDOM. n. f. [from chief.] Sovereignty. Not in use.

Zephyrus being in love with Chloris, and covetting her to wife, gave her for a dowry the chiefdom and sovereignty of all flowers and green herbs.

Spenser's Nat. Gloss.

CHIEFLESS. adj. [from chief.] Wanting a head; being without a leader.

And chiefless armies do'd out the campaign,
And navies yawn'd for orders on the main.

Pope.

CHIEFLY. adv. [from chief.] Principally;
eminently; more than common.

Any man who will consider the nature of an epic poem, what actions it describes, and what person they are chiefly whom it informs, will find it a work full of difficulty.

Dryden.

Those parts of the kingdom, where the number and estates of the dissenters chiefly lay.

Swift.

CHIEFRIE. n. f. [from chief.] A small rent paid to the lord paramount.

They shall be well able to live upon those lands, to yield her majesty reasonable chiefrie, and also give a competent maintenance unto the garrisons.

Spenser's Ireland.

Would the reserved rent at this day be any more than a small chiefrie? Swift.

CHIEFTAIN. n. f. [from chief, n. f. captain.]

1. A leader; a commander.

That forc'd their chieftain, for his safety's sake
(Their chieftain Hunter named was right)
Unto the mighty stream him to betake,
Where he an end of battle and of life did make.

Fairy Queen.

2. The head of a clan.

It broke, and absolutely subdued all the lords and chieftains of the Irishry. Davies on Ireland.
CHIEVANCE. n. f. [probably from achevance, French, purchase.] Traffick, in which money is extorted; as discount.
Obsolete.

There were good laws against usury, the bastard use of money; and against unlawful chie-vances and exchanges, which is bastard usury.

Bacon.

CHILBLAIN. n. f. [from chill, cold, and blain; so that Temple seems mistaken in his etymology, or has written it wrong to serve a purpose.] A sore made by frost.

I remembered the cure of chilblains when I was a boy (which may be called the children's gout) by burning at the fire.

Temple.

CHILD. n. f. in the plural children. [cild,
Saxon.]

1. An infant, or very young person.

In age, to wish for youth is full as vain,
As for a youth to turn a child again.

Dehomed.

We should no more be kinder to one child than to another, than we are tender of one eye more than of the other.

L'Estrange.

The young lad must not be ventured abroad at eight or ten, for fear of what may happen to the tender child; though he then runs ten times less risque than at sixteen.

Locke.

The stroke of death is nothing: children endure it, and the greatest cowards find it no pain.

Macle.

2. One in the line of filiation, opposed to the parent.

Where children have been exposed, or taken away young, and afterwards have approached to their parents presence, the parents, though they have not known them, have had a secret joy, or other alteration, thereupon.

Bacon.

I shall see

The winged vengeance overtake such children.

Shakespeare.

So unexhausted her perfections were,
That for more children she had more to spare.

Dryden.

He, in a fruitful wife's embraces old,
A long increase of children's children told.

Addison.

3. The descendants of a man, how remote soever, are called children; as the children of Edom, the children of Israel.

4. In the language of scripture.

One weak in knowledge. Isaiah. 1 Cor.
Such as are young in grace. 1 John.
Such as are humble and docile. Matthew.

The children of light, the children of darkness;
who follow light, who remain in darkness.

The elect, the blessed, are also called the children of God.

How is he numbered among the children of God, and his lot is among the saints? Wisdom.

In the New Testament, believers are commonly called children of God.

Ye are all the children of God, by faith in Jesus Christ. Gal. iii. 26.

Calmet.

5. A girl child. Not in use.

Mercy on's! a hearne, a very pretty hearne

A boy, or child, I wonder?

Shakespeare.

6. Any thing the product or effect of another.

Mercant, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black tangles. Shakespeare.
7. To be with CHILD. To be pregnant.
If it must stand still, let wives with child
Pray that their burthen may not fall this day,
Lest that their hopes prodigiously be crost.
Shakespeare.

To CHILD. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring children.

The spring the summer,
The chiding autumn, angry winter, change
Their wonted liveries. Shakespeare.
As to chiding women, young vigorous people, after irregularities of diet, in such it begins with hemorrhages. Arbuthnot.

CHILDBEARING. particip. subst. [from child and bear.] The act of bearing children.

To thee
Pains only in childbearing were foretold,
And, bunging forth, soon recompens'd with joy,
Fruit of thy womb.
The timorous and irresolute Sylvia has demurred till she is past childbearing. Adams.

CHILDBED. n. f. [from child and bed.] The state of a woman bringing a child, or being in labour.

The funerals of prince Arthur, and of queen Elizabeth, who died in childbed in the Tower. Bacon.

Pure, as when wash'd from spot of childbed stain. Par. Reg.

Yet these, tho' poor, the pain of childbed bear. Dryden.

Let no one be actually married, till she hath the childbed pillows.
Women in childbed are in the case of persons wounded. Arbuthnot on Diet.

CHILDBIRTH. n. f. [from child and birth.] Travail; labour; the time of bringing forth; the act of bringing forth.

The mother of Pyrocles, after her childbirth, died. Sidney.

A kernel void of any taste, but not so of virtue, especially for women travelling in childbirth. Carew's Survey.

In the whole sex of women, God hath decreed the sharpest pains of childbirth; to shew, that there is no state exempt from sorrow. Taylor.

Heto his wife, before the time assign'd
For childbirth came, thus bluntly spoke his mind.
Dryden.

CHIL'DED. adj. [from child.] Furnished with a child.

How light and portable my pain seems now,
When that which makes me bend, makes the king bow;
He childed as I father'd. Shakespeare.

CHIL'DERMAS DAY. [from child and mas.] The day of the week, throughout the year, answering to the day on which the feast of the Holy Innocents is solemnized; which weak and superstitious persons think an unlucky day.

To talk of laces, or such uncouth things, proves as ominous to the fisherman, as the beginning of a voyage on the day when chil'dermas is felt, doth to the mariner. Carew.

CHIL'DHOOD. n. f. [from child; childh, Saxon.]

1. The state of children; or, the time in which we are children: it includes infancy, but is continued to puberty.

Now I have stain'd the childhood of our joy
With blood, remov'd but little from our own.
Shakespeare.

The sons of lords and gentlemen should be trained up in learning from their childhood.
Spenser on Ireland.

Seldom have I seen'd to eye
Thy infancy, thy childhood, and thy youth. Mil-

The same authority that the actions of a man have with us in our childhood, the same, in every period of life has the practice of all whom we regard as our superiors. Rogers.

2. The time of life between infancy and puberty.

Infancy and childhood demand thin, copious, nourishing aliment. Arbuthnot.

3. The properties of a child.

Their love in early infancy began,
And rose as childhood ripen'd into man. Dryden.

CHIL'DISH. adj. [from child.]

1. Having the qualities of a child; trifling; ignorant; simple.

Learning hath its infancy, when it is but beginning and almost childish: then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile. Bacon.

2. Becoming only children; trifling; puerile.

Mufidorus being elder by three or four years,
there was taken away the occasion of childish
contentions. Sidney.

The lion's whelps the saw how he did bear,
And lull in rugged arms withouten childish fear.
Spenser.

When I was yet a child, no childish play
To me was pleasing; all my mind was set Serious to learn and know. Par. Reg.

The fathers looked on the worship of images
as the most silly and childish thing in the world.

One that hath newly learn'd to speak and go Loves childish plays.
They have spoiled the walls with childish sentences, that consist often in a jingle of words. Arbuthnot on Italy.

By conversation the childish humours of their younger days might be worn out. Arbuthnot.

CHIL'DISHLY. adv. [from childish.] In a childish trifling way; like a child.

Together with his fame their infamy was spread, who had so rashly and childishly ejected him. Hooker.

Some men are of excellent judgment in their own professions, but childishly unskilful in any thing besides. Hayward.

CHIL'DISHNESS. n. f. [from childish.]

1. Puerility; triflingness.

The actions of childishness, and unfashionable carriage, time and age will of itself be sure to reform. Lacke.

Nothing in the world could give a truer idea of the superstition, credulity, and childishness of the Roman catholic religion. Adams.

2. Harmlessness.

Speak thou, boy;
Perhaps thy childishness will move him more Than can our reason. Shakespeare.

CHIL'DLESS. adj. [from child.] Without children; without offspring.

As thy sword hath made women childless, so thalt thy mother be childless among women.
Samuel.

A man shall see the noblest works and foundations have proceeded from childless men; which have sought to express the images of their minds, where those of their bodies have failed: so the care of posterity is most in them that have no posterity. Racon's Essays.

Childless thou art, childless remain: so death
Shall be deceiv'd his glut. Milton.

She can give the reason why one died childless.
Spectator.

CHIL'DLIKE. adj. [from child and like.] Becoming or befitting a child.

Who can owe no less than childlike obedience to her that hath more than motherly care. Hooker.

I thought the remnant of mine age
Should have been cherish'd by her childlike duty.
Shakespeare.

CHIL'LIAD. n. f. [from χίλια.] A thousand; a collection or sum containing a thousand.

We make cycles and periods of years, as decades, centuries, chilads, for the use of computation in history. Hilder.

CHILIA'EDRON. n. f. [from χίλιον.] A

In a man, who speaks of a chiliedron, or a body of a thousand sides, the idea of the figure may be very confused, though that of the number be very distinct. Locke.

CHILIFA'CTIVE. } adj. [from chyle. See CHILIFA'CTORY. } CHYLIFA'CTIVE.]
That has the quality of making chyle.

Whether this be not effected by some way of corrosion, rather than any proper digestion, chi- *lifa*ctive mutation, or alimantal conversion.

We should rather rely upon a *chylifa*ctory menstruum, or digestive preparation drawn from species or individuals, whose stomachs peculiarly dissolve lapidous bodies. Brown.

CHYLIFA'CTION. n. f. [See CHYLIFICA-
TION.] The act of making chyle.

Nor will we affirm that iron is indigested in the stomach of the ostriche; but we suspect this effect to proceed not from any liquid reduction, or tendency to chylification, by the power of natural heat. Brown's Vulg. Err.

CHILL. adj. [cele, Sax.]

1. Cold; that is cold to the touch.

And all my plants I save from nightly ill,
Of noisome winds, and blasting vapours chill.
Milton.

2. Cold; having the sensation of cold;
shivering with cold.

My heart and my chill veins freeze with despair. Romv.

3. Dull; not warm; not forward: as, a chill reception.

4. Depressed; dejected; discouraged.

5. Unaffectionate; cold of temper.

CHILL. n. f. [from the adjective.] Chil-ness; cold.

I very well knew one to have a sort of chill about his præcordia and head. Derham.

To CHILL. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make cold.

Age has not yet
So shrunk my sinews, or so chill'd my veins,
But conscious virtue in my breast remains. Dryd.
Heat burns his rise, frost chills his setting beams,
And vex the world with opposite extremes. Creech.

Each changing season does its poison bring;
Rheums chill the winter, agues blast the spring.
Pope.

Now no more the drum
Provokes to arms; or trumpet's clangor shrill
Affrights the wives, or chills the virgin's blood.
Philips.

2. To depress; to deject; to discourage.

Every thought on God chills the gaiety of his spirits, and awakens terrors which he cannot bear.
Rogers.

3. To blast with cold.

The fruits perish on the ground,
Or from decay, by snows immoderate chill'd,
By winds are blasted, or by lightning kill'd.
Blackmore.

CHILLINESS. n. f. [from chilly.] A sensation of shivering cold.

If the patient survives three days, the acuteness of the pain abates, and a chilliness or shivering affects the body. Arbuthnot.

CHIL'LY. adj. [from chill.] Somewhat cold.

A chilly sweat bedews
My shudd'ring limbs. Philips.

CHIL'NESS. n. f. [from chill.] Coldness;
want of warmth.

If you come out of the sun suddenly into a shade, there followeth a chillness or shivering in all the body. Bacon.

This while he thinks, he lifts aloft his dart,
A generous chilins seizes ev'ry part,
The veins pour back the blood, and fortify the heart. Dryden.

CHIME. n. f. [time, Dutch.] The end of a barrel or tub.

CHIME. n. f. [The original of this word is doubtful. Junius and Minsheu suppose it corrupted from cimbal; Skinner from gamme, or gamut; Henshaw from chiamare, to call, because the chime calls to church. Perhaps it is only softened from chirme, or churm, an old word for the sound of many voices, or instruments making a noise together.]

1. The consonant or harmonick sound of many correspondent instruments.

Hang our shaggy thighs with bells?
That, as we do strike a tune,
In our dance shall make a chime. Ben Jonson.

The sound
Of instruments, that made melodious chime,
Was heard, of harp and organ. Milton.
Love virtue, she alone is free;
She can teach you how to climb
Higher than the spherie chime. Milton.

2. The correspondence of sound.

Love first invented verse, and form'd the rhyme,
The motion measur'd, harmoniz'd the chime. Dryden.

3. The sound of bells, not rung by ropes, but struck with hammers. In this sense it is always used in the plural, chimes.

We have heard the chimes at midnight. Shakspeare.

4. The correspondence of proportion or relation.

The conceptions of things are placed in their several degrees of similitude; as in several proportions, one to another: in which harmonious chimes, the voice of reason is often drowned. Greuv.

To CHIME. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To sound in harmony or consonance.

To make the rough recital aptly chime,
Or bring the sum of Gallia's ills to rhyme,
'Tis mighty hard. Prior.

2. To correspond in relation or proportion.

Father and son, husband and wife, and such other correlative terms, do belong one to another; and, through custom, do readily chime, and answer one another, in people's memories. Locke.

3. To agree; to fall in with.

He not only sat quietly and heard his father railed at, but often chimed in with the discourse. Abraham's Hist. of John Bull.

4. To suit with; to agree.

Any sect, whose reasonings, interpretation, and language, I have been used to, with, of course, make all chime that way; and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, seem harsh, strange, and uncouth to me. Locke.

5. To jingle; to clatter.

But with the meaner tribe I'm forc'd to chime,
And, wanting strength to rise, descend to rhyme. Smith.

To CHIME. v. a.

1. To move, or strike, or cause to sound harmonically, or with just consonance.

With lifted arms they order ev'ry blow,
And chime their sounding hammers in a row:
With labour'd anvils china groans below. Dryden.

2. To strike a bell with a hammer.

CHIMERA. n. f. [Chimera, Lat.] A vain and wild fancy, as remote from reality as the existence of the poetical Chimera, a monster feigned to have the head of a lion, the belly of a goat, and the tail of a dragon.

In that, the force of dreams is of a piece, Chimeras all, and more absurd, or less. Dryden.
No body joins the voice of a sheep with the shape of a horse, to be the complex ideas of any real substance, unless he has a mind to fill his head with chimeras, and his discourse with unintelligible words. Locke.

CHIMERICAL. adj. [from chimera.] Imaginary; fanciful; wildly, vainly, or fantastically conceived; fantastick.

Notwithstanding the fineness of this allegory may atone for it in some measure, I cannot think that persons of such a chimerical existence are proper actors in an epic poem. Spectator.

CHIMERICALLY. adv. [from chimerical.] Vainly; wildly; fantastically.

CHIMINAGE. n. f. [from chimin, an old law word for a road.] A toll for passage through a forest. Cowell.

CHIMNEY. n. f. [cheminée, French.]

1. The passage through which the smoke ascends from the fire in the house.

Chimneys with scorn rejecting smoke. Swift.

2. The turret raised above the roof of the house, for conveyance of the smoke.

The night has been unruly: where we lay,
Our chimneys were blown down. Shakspeare.

3. The fire-place.

The chimney
Is south the chamber! and the chimney-piece, Chaste Dian bathing. Shakspeare.

The fire which the Chaldeans worshipped for a god, is crept into every man's chimney. Raleigh.
Low offices, which some neighbours hardly think it worth stirring from their chimney sides to obtain. Swift on Sac. Tepi.

CHIMNEY-CORNER. n. f. [from chimney and corner.] The fire-side; the seat on each end of the fire-grate: usually noted in proverbial language for being the place of idlers.

Yet some old men
Tell stories of you in their chimney-corner. Denham.

CHIMNEYPIECE. n. f. [from chimney and piece.] The ornamental piece of wood, or stone, that is set round the fire-place.

Polish and brighten the marble hearths and chimney-pieces with a clout dip't in grease. Swift.

CHIMNEYSWEEPER. n. f. [from chimney and sweeper.]

1. One whose trade it is to clean foul chimnies of soot.

To look like her, are chimney-sweepers black;
And since her time are colliers counted bright. Shakspeare.

The little chimney-sweeper skulks along,
And marks with footy stains the heedless throng. Gay.

Even lying Ned, the chimney-sweeper of Savoy,
And Tom the Portugal dustman, put in their claims. Arbutnot.

2. It is used proverbially for one of a mean and vile occupation.

Golden lads and girls, all must,
As chimney-sweepers, come to dust. Shakspeare.

CHIN. n. f. [cinne, Sax. kinn, Germ.] The part of the face beneath the under lip.

But all the words I could get of her, was wrying her wait, and thrusting out her chin. Sidney.

With his Amazonian chin he drove
The buffed lips before him. Shakspeare.

He rais'd his hardly head, which sunk again,
And sinking on his bosom, knock'd his chin. Dryden.

CHINA. n. f. [from China, the country where it is made.] China ware; porcelain; a species of vessels made in China, dimly transparent, partaking of the qualities of earth and glass. They are made by mingling two kinds of earth, of which one easily vitrifies; the other resists a very strong heat: when the vitrifiable earth is melted into glass, they are completely burnt.

Spleen, vapours, or small-pox above them all;
And mists of herself, tho' china fall. Pope.
After supper, carry your plate and china together in the same basket. Swift.

CHINA-ORANGE. n. f. [from China and orange.] The sweet orange: brought originally from China.

Not many years has the China-orange been propagated in Portugal and Spain. Arbutnot.

CHINCUGH. n. f. [perhaps more properly kinough, from linkin, to pant, Dutch, and cough.] A violent and convulsive cough, to which children are subject.

I have observed a chincough complicated with an intermitting fever. Flayer on the Humours.

CHINE. n. f. [eschine, Fr. schiena, Ital. spina, Lat. cein, Arm.]

1. The part of the back in which the spine or backbone is found.

She strake him such a blow upon his chine that he opened all his body. Sidney.
He presents her with the rusty head,
And chine with rising bristles roughly spread. Dryden.

2. A piece of the back of an animal.

Cut out the burly-boned clown in chines of beef ere thou sleep. Shakspeare.
He had killed eight fat hogs for this reason, and he had dealt about his chines very liberally amongst his neighbours. Spectator.

To CHINE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut into chines.

He that in his line did chine the long ribb'd Apennine. Dryden.

CHINK. n. f. [cinan, to gape, Sax.] A small aperture longwise; an opening or gap between the parts of any thing.

Pyramus and Thisbe did talk through the chink of a wall. Shakspeare. Midsum. Night's Dream.
Plagues also have been raised by anointing the chinks of doors, and the like. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Though birds have no epiglottis, yet they to contract the chink of their larynx, as to prevent the admission of wet or dry invigited. Arbutnot.

Other inventions, false and absurd, that are like to many chinks and holes to discover the rottenness of the whole fabric. South.

In vain the search'd each cranny of the house,
Each gaping chink impervious to a mouse. Swift.

To CHINK. v. a. [derived by Skinner from the sound.] To shake so as to make a sound.

He chinks his purse, and takes his seat of state;
With ready quills the dedicators wait. Pope.

To CHINK. v. a. To sound by striking each other.

Lord Strutt's money shines as bright, and chinks as well, as 'figure South's. Arbutnot.
When not a guinea chink'd on Martin's boards,
And Atwill's self was drain'd of all his hoards. South.

CHINKY. adj. [from chink.] Full of holes; gaping; opening into narrow clefts.

Put plaster thou the chinky bivel with clay.

Dryden's Virgil.

Grimalkin, to domestick vermin sworn
An everlasting foe, with watchful eye
Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,
Protending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice Sure ruin. Philips' Poems.

CHINTS. n. f. Cloth of cotton made in India, and printed with colours.

Let a charming chints, and Brussels lace,
Wrap my cold limbs, and shade my lifeless face.

Pope.

CHIOPPINE. n. f. [from chapin, Span.] A high shoe, formerly worn by ladies.

Your ladyship is nearer heaven than when I saw you last, by the altitude of a chioppine.

Shakspeare.

The woman was a giantess, and yet walked always in chioppines.

Cowley.

CHIP, CHEAP, CHIPPING, in the names of places, imply a market; from the Saxon cyppan ceapan, to buy. Gibson.

To CHIP. v. a. [probably corrupted from chop.] To cut into small pieces; to diminish, by cutting away a little at a time.

His mangled myrmydons,
Noseless, handleless, hackt and chipt, come to him,
Crying on Hector. Shakspeare's Troil. and Cres.

To return to our statue in the block of marble, we see it sometimes only begun to be chipped; sometimes rough hewn, and just sketched into an human figure. Addison's Spectator.

The critick strikes out all that is not just;
And 'tis ev'n for the butter chips his crust. King.

Industry

Taught him to chip the wood, and hew the stone.

Thomson.

CHIP. n. f. [from the verb.]

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CHIRO'GRAPHER. n. f. [χρῖς, the hand, and γράφω, to write.] He that exercises or professes the art or business of writing.

Thus passeth it from this office to the chirographers, to be engrossed. Baron.

CHIRO'GRAPHIST. n. f. [See CHIRO'GRAPHER.] This word is used in the following passage, I think improperly, for one that tells fortunes by examining the hand: the true word is chiroscopist, or chirromancer.

Let the physiognomists examine his features; let the chirographists behold his palm; but, above all, let us consult for the calculation of his senectivity.

Arbutnot and Pipe.

CHIRO'GRAPHY. n. f. [See CHIRO'GRAPHER.] The art of writing.

CHIRO'MANCY. n. f. [See CHIRO'ROMANCY.] One that foretels future events by inspecting the hand.

The middle fort, who have not much to spare,
To chirromancers' cheaper art repair,
Who clap the pretty palm, to make the lines more fair. Dryden's Juvenal.

CHIRO'ROMANCY. n. f. [χρῖς, the hand, and μαντεῖα, a prophet.] The art of foretelling the events of life, by inspecting the hand.

There is not much considerable in that doctrine of chirromancy, that spots in the top of the nails do signify things past; in the middle, things present; and at the bottom, events to come. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To CHIRP. v. n. [perhaps contracted from cheer up.] The Dutch have cirk-en.] To make a cheerful noise; as birds, when they call without singing.

She chirping ran, he peeping flew away,
Till hard by them both he and she did stay.

Sidney.

Came he right now to sing a raven's note;
And thinks he that the chirping of a wren
Can chase away the first conceived fount?

Shakspeare.

No chirping lark the welkin thence invokes.

Gay's Pastorals.

The careful hen

Calls all her chirping family around. Thomson.

To CHIRP. v. a. [This seems apparently corrupted from cheer up.] To make cheerful.

Let no sober bigot here think it a sin
To push on the chirping and moderate bottle.

Johnson.

Sir Balaam now, he lives like other folks;
He takes his chirping pint, he cracks his jokes.

Pope.

CHIRP. n. f. [from the verb.] The voice of birds or insects.

Winds over us whisper'd, flocks by us did bleat,
And chirp went the grasshopper under our feet.

Spektor.

CHIR'PER. n. f. [from chirp.] One that chirps; one that is cheerful.

To CHIRRE. v. n. [ceonian, Sax.] See CHURME. To coo as a pigeon. Junius.

CHIRUR'GEON. n. f. [χρῖς, the hand, and εργον, work.] One that cures ailments, not by internal medicines, but outward applications. It is now generally pronounced, and by many written, surgeon.

When a man's wounds cease to smart, only because he has lost his feeling, they are nevertheless mortal, for his not feeling his need of a chirurgion.

South's Sermons.

CHIRUR'GERY. n. f. [from chirurgion.] The art of curing by external applications. This is called surgery.

Gynecia having skill in chirurgery, an art in those days much esteemed. Sidney.

Nature could do nothing in her case without the help of chirurgery, in drying up the luxurious flesh, and making way to pull out the rotten bones. Wifeman.

CHIRUR'GICAL. adj. See CHIRUR'CHUR'GICK. } GEON.

1. Having qualities useful in outward applications to hurts.

As to the chirurgical or physical virtues of wax, it is reckoned a mean between hot and cold. Mortimer.

2. Relating to the manual part of healing.

3. Manual in general, consisting in operations of the hand. This sense, though the first according to etymology, is now scarce found.

The chirurgical or manual part doth refer to the making instruments, and exercising particular experiments.

CHISEL. n. f. [ciseau, Fr. of scissum, Lat.] An instrument with which wood or stone is pared away.

What fine chisel

Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me,
For I will kiss her. Shakspeare.

There is such a seeming softness in the limbs, as if not a chisel had hewed them out of stone,
but a pencil had drawn and stroaked them in oil.

Warton.

Imperfect shapes: in marble such are seen,
When the rude chisel does the man begin. Dryden.

To CHISEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut with a chisel.

CHIT. n. f. [according to Dr. Hicks, from kind, Germ. child; perhaps from chico, little, Span.]

1. A child; a baby: generally used of young persons in contempt.

There will appear such chits in story,
'Twill turn all politicks to jest. Anonymous.

2. The shoot of corn from the end of the grain. A cant term with maltsters.

Barley, couched four days, will begin to shew the chit or sprit at the root-end. Mortimer.

3. A freckle. [from chickpea.] In this sense it is seldom used.

To CHIT. v. n. [from the noun.] To sprout; to shoot at the end of the grain: cant.

I have known barley chit in seven hours after it had been thrown forth. Mortimer.

CHIT'CHAT. n. f. [corrupted by reduplication from chat.] Prattle; idle prate; idle talk. A word only used in ludicrous conversation.

I am a member of the female society, who call ourselves the chit-chat club. Spektor.

CHIT'TERLINGS. n. f. without singular. [from schysterlingh, Dut. Minibew; from kutteln, Germ. Skinner.] The guts; the bowels. Skinner.

CHIT'TY. adj. [from chit.] Childish; like a baby.

CHIVALROUS. adj. [from chevalry.] Relating to chivalry, or errant knight-hood; knightly; warlike; adventurous; daring. Out of use.

And noble minds of yore allied were
In brave pursuit of chivalrous emprise. Fairy Queen.

CHIVALRY. n. f. [chevalerie, French, knight-hood, from cheval, a horse; as equis in Latin. It ought properly to be written chevalry. It is a word not much used, but in old poems or romances.]

1. Knight-hood; a military dignity.

There be now, for martial encouragement, some degrees and orders of chivalry; which, nevertheless, are conferred promiscuously upon soldiers and no soldiers. Baron.

2. The qualifications of a knight; as, valour, dexterity in arms.

Thou hast slain

The flow'r of Europe for his chivalry. Shakspeare.

I may speak it to my shame,

I have a truant been to chivalry. Shakspeare.

3. The general system of knight-hood.

Solemnly he swore,

That, by the faith which knights to knight-hood bore,

And whate'er else to chivalry belongs,
He would not cease till he reveng'd their wrongs.
Dryden.

4. An adventure; an exploit. Not in use.
They four doing acts more dangerous, though less famous, because they were but private chivalry.
Sidney.

5. The body or order of knights.
And by his light
Did all the chivalry of England move
To do brave acts. Shakespeare.

6. In law.
Servitium militare, of the French chevalier; a tenure of land by knight's service. There is no land but is holden mediately or immediately of the crown, by some service or other; and therefore are all our freeholds, that are to us and our heirs, called feuda, fees, as proceeding from the benefit of the king. As the king gave to the nobles large possessions for this or that rent and service, so they parcelled out their lands, so received for rents and services, as they thought good: and those services are by Littleton divided into chivalry and socage. The one is martial and military; the other, clownish and rustic.
Chivalry, therefore, is a tenure of service, whereby the tenant is bound to perform some noble or military office unto his lord: and is of two sorts; either regal, that is, such as may hold only of the king; or such as may also hold of a common person as well as of the king. That which may hold only of the king, is properly called sergeantry; and is again divided into grand or petit, i. e. great or small. Chivalry that may hold of a common person, as well as of the king, is called feutagium. Cowell.

CHIVES. n. f. [cive, Fr. Skinner.]

1. The threads or filaments rising in flowers with seeds at the end.
The masculine or prolific seed contained in the chives or apices of the stamina. Ray.

2. A species of small onion. Skinner.
CHLOROSIS. n. f. [from χλωρός, green.]
The greenickness.

To CHOK. See CHOK.

CHOCOLATE. n. f. [chocolate, Span.]

1. The nut of the cacao or cocoa tree.
The tree hath a rosc flower, of a great number of petals, from whose empalements arises the pointal, being a tube cut into many parts, which becomes a fruit shaped somewhat like a cucumber, and deeply furrowed, in which are contained several seeds, collected into an oblong heap, and slit down, somewhat like almonds. It is a native of America, and is found in great plenty in several places between the tropicks, and grows wild. See COCOA. Miller.
2. The cake or mass, made by grinding the kernel of the cacao nut with other substances, to be dissolved in hot water.
The Spaniards were the first who brought chocolate into use in Europe, to promote the consumption of their cacao-nuts, achiot, and other drugs, which their West Indies furnish, and which enter the composition of chocolate.
Chambers.

3. The liquor made by a solution of chocolate in hot water.

Chocolate is certainly much the best of these three exotic liquors: its oil seems to be both rich, alimentary, and anodyne. Arbutnot.
In fumes of burning chocolate shall glow,
And tremble at the sea that froths below! Pope.

CHOCOLATE-HOUSE. n. f. [chocolate and house.] A house where company is entertained with chocolate.

Ever since that time, Lisander has been twice a day at the chocolate-house. Taylor.

CHODE. The old preterit of chide.
And Jacob was wroth, and chode with Laban.
Genesis.

CHOICE. n. f. [choix, French.]

1. The act of choosing; determination between different things proposed; election.

If you oblige me suddenly to chuse,
The choice is made; for I must both refuse. Dryd.
Soft election doth thy style renown,
Gentle or sharp, according to thy choicer,
To laugh at follies, or to lash at vice. Dryden.

2. The power of choosing; election.

Choicer there is not, unless the thing which we take be so in our power, that we might have refused it. If fire consume the stable, it chooseth not to do, because the nature thereof is such that it can do no other. Hooker.

There's no liberty like the freedom of having it at my own choice, whether I will live to the world, or to myself. L'Estrange.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice. Whereas, all moral goodness consisteth in the elective act of the understanding will. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

Whether he will remove his contemplation from one idea to another, is many times in his choice. Locke.

3. Care in choosing; curiosity of disincintion.

Julius Cæsar did write a collection of apo-phthegms: it is pity his book is lost; for I imagine they were collected with judgment and choice. Bacon's Apophthegms.

4. The thing chosen; the thing taken, or approved, in preference to others.

Your choice is not so rich in birth as beauty;
That you might well enjoy her. Shakespeare.
Take to thee, from among the cherubim,
Thy choice of flaming warriors. Milton.

Now, Mars, the fair, let fame exalt her voice;
Nor let thy conquests only be her choice. Prior.

5. The best part of any thing, that is more properly the object of choice.

The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the Psalms do both more briefly contain, and more movingly also express. Hooker.

Thou art a mighty prince: in the choice of our sepulchres bury thy dead. Genesis.

Their riders, the flower and choice
Of many provinces, from bound to bound.
Milton.

6. Several things proposed at once, as objects of judgment and election.

A braver choice of dauntless spirits
Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shaksp.

7. To make CHOICE of. To choose; to take from several things proposed.

Wisdom of what herself approves makes choice,
Nor is led captive by the common voice. Druid.

CHOICE. adj. [choisi, French.]

1. Select; of extraordinary value.

After having set before the king the choicest of wines and fruits, he told him the best part of his entertainment was to come. Guardian.

Thus, in a sea of folly tugs'd,
My choicest hours of life are lost. Swift.

2. Chary; frugal; careful: used of persons.

He that is choise of his time, will also be choise of his company, and choise of his actions.
Taylor's Holy Living.

CHOICELESS. adj. [from choice.] Without the power of choosing; without right of choice; not free.

Neither the weight of the matter of which the cylinder is made, nor the round voluble form of it, are any more imputable to that dead choiceless creature, than the first motion of it; and, therefore, it cannot be a fit resemblance to shew the reconcilableness of fate with choice. Hammond.

CHOICELY. adv. [from choice.]

1. Curiously; with exact choice.

A band of men,
Collected choicely from each county some. Shaksp.

2. Valuably; excellently.

It is certain it is choicely good. Walton's Ang.

CHOICENESS. n. f. [from choicer.] A choice, a particular value.

Carry into the shade such auriculars, seedlings, or plants, as are for their choiceness reserved in pots. Evelyn's Calendar.

CHOIR. n. f. [chorus, Latin.]

1. An assembly or band of singers.

They now assist the choir
Of angels, who their songs admire. Waller.

2. The singers in divine worship.

The choir,
With all the choicest music of the kingdom,
Together sung To Deum. Shakespeare.

3. The part of the church where the choristers or singers are placed.

The lords and ladies having brought the queen
To a prepar'd place in the choir, sett off
At distance from her. Shakespeare.

To CHOKE. v. a. [aceocan, Sax. from ceoca, the cheek or mouth. According to Minshew, from צוק; whence, probably, the Spanish ahogar.]

1. To suffocate; to kill by stopping the passage of respiration.

But when to my good lord I prove untrue,
I'll choke myself. Shakespeare.
While you thunder'd, clouds of dust did choke
Contending troops. Waller.

2. To stop up; to obstruct; to block up a passage.

Men troop'd up to the king's capacious court,
Whose porticos were choke'd with the retort.
Chapman.

They are at a continual expence to cleanse the ports, and keep them from being choke'd up, by the help of several engines. Addison on Italy.

While pray'rs and tears his destin'd progress
stay,
And crowds of mourners choke their sov'reign's way. Tickel.

3. To hinder by obstruction or confinement.

As two spent swimmers, that do cling together,
And choke their art. Shakespeare.

She cannot lose her perfect pow'r to see,
Tho' mists and clouds do choke her window-light.
Darwin.

It seemeth the fire is so choke'd, as not to be able to remove the stone. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

You must make the mould big enough to contain the whole fruit, when it is grown to the greatest; for else you will choke the spreading of the fruit. Bacon's Natural History.

The fire, which choke'd in althes lay,
A load too heavy for his soul to move,
Was upward blown below, and breath'd away by love. Dryden.

4. To suppress.

And yet we ventur'd; for the gain propos'd
Choke'd the respect of likely peril fear'd. Shaksp.
Confess thee freely of thy sin:

For to deny each article with oath,
Cannot remove nor choke the strong conception
That I do groan withal. Shakespeare.

5. To overpower.

And that which fell among thorns are they,
which, when they have heard, go forth, and are choke'd with cares, and riches, and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection. Luke.

No fruitful crop the sickly fields return;
But oats and darnel choke the rising corn. Dryd.

CHO'LAGOGUES. n. f. [χολος, bile.] Medicines which have the power of purging bile or choler.

CHO'LER. n. f. [cholera, Lat. from χολη.]

1. The bile.

Marcilius Ficinus increases these proportions, adding two more of pure choler. Hutton.

There would be a main defect, if such a feeding animal, and so subject unto diseases from bilious causes, should want a proper conveyance for choler. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. The humour which, by its superabundance, is supposed to produce irascibility.

It engenders choler, planteth anger; And better 'twere that both of us did fast, Since, of ourselves, ourselves are choleric, Than feed it with such over-roasted flesh. Shaksp.

3. Angry; rage.

Put him to choler straight; he hath been used Ever to conquer, and to have his word Of contradiction. Shaksp.

He, methinks, is no great scholar, Who can mistake desire for choler. Prior.

CHO'LERICK. adj. [cholericus, Latin.]

1. Abounding with choler.

If king Lewis vouchsafe to furnish us

With some few bands of *chos*en soldiers,

I'll undertake to land them on our coast. Shakspeare.

CHOUGH. n. f. [ceo, Sax. choucas, Fr.]

A bird which frequents the rocks by the sea side, like a jackdaw, but bigger.

Flammer.

In birds, kites and kestrels have a resemblance with hawks, crows with ravens, daws and choughs.

Bacon's Natural History.

To crows the like impartial grace affords,
And choughs and daws, and such republic birds.

Dryden.

CHOULE. n. f. [commonly pronounced and written jewel.] The crop of a bird.

The choule or crop, adhering unto the lower side of the bill, and so descending by the throat, is a bag or sachel. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To CHOUSE. v. a. [The original of this word is much doubted by Skinner, who tries to deduce it from the French goffer, to laugh at; or joncher, to wheedle; and from the Teutonic kosen, to prattle. It is perhaps a fortuitous and cant word, without etymology.]

1. To cheat; to trick; to impose upon.

Freedom and zeal have chosu'd you o'er and o'er;

Pray give us leave to huddle you once more.

Dryden.

From London they came, silly people to chouse,

Their lands and their faces unknown. Swift.

Moxon.

CHURCH. n. f. [cince, Sax. kyrkian.] 1. The collective body of christians, usually termed the catholic church.

The church, being a supernatural society, doth differ from natural societies in this; that the persons unto whom we associate ourselves in the one are men, simply considered as men; but they to whom we be joined in the other, are God, angels, and holy men.

Hooker.

2. The body of christians adhering to one particular opinion, or form of worship.

The church is a religious assembly, or the large fair building where they meet; and sometimes the same word means a synod of bishops, or of presbyters; and in some places it is the pope and a general council.

Watts' Logic.

3. The place which christians consecrate to the worship of God.

It comprehends the whole church, viz. the name or body of the church, together with the chancel, which is even included under the word church.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

That churches were consecrated unto none but the Lord only, the very general name chiefly doth sufficiently shew: church doth signify no other thing than the Lord's house.

Hooker.

That you uny the winds, and let them fight Against the churches.

Shakespeare.

4. It is used frequently in conjunction with other words; as church-member, the member of a church; church-power, spiritual or ecclesiastical authority.

In this point of church-authority, I have sifted all the little seraps alleged.

Atterbury.

CHURCH-BURIAL. n. f. Burial according to the rites of the church.

The bishop has the care of seeing that all ecclesiastics, after their deaths, be not denied church-burial, according to the usage and custom of the place.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

CHURCH-FOUNDER. n. f. He that builds or endows a church.

Whether emperors or bishops in those days were church-founders, the solemn dedication of churches they thought not to be a work in itself either vain or superstitious.

Hooker.

CHURCHMAN. n. f. [church and man.]

1. An ecclesiastick; a clergyman; one that ministers in sacred things.

If any thing be offered to you touching the church and churchmen, or church-government, rely not only upon yourself.

Bacon.

A very difficult work to do, to reform and reduce a church into order, that had been so long neglected, and that was to it filled by many weak and more wilful churchmen.

Clarendon.

Patience in want, and poverty of mind, These marks of church and churchmen he design'd, And living taught, and dying left behind.

Dryden.

2. An adherent to the church of England.

CHURCH-WARDENS. n. f. [See WARDEN.] Officers yearly chosen, by the consent of the minister and parishioners, according to the custom of each place, to look to the church, church-yard, and such things as belong to both; and to observe the behaviour of the parishioners, for such faults as appertain to the jurisdiction or censure of the ecclesiastical court. They are a kind of corporation, enabled by law to sue for any thing belonging to their church, or poor of their parish.

Cowell.

There should likewise church-wardens, of the gravest men in the parish, be appointed, as they be here in England.

Spenser.

Our church-wardens

Feast on the silver, and give us the farthings.

Gay.

CHURCHYARD. n. f. The ground adjoining to the church, in which the dead are buried; a cemetery.

I am almost afraid to stand alone

Here in the churchyard, yet I will adventure.

Shakespeare.

In churchyards where they bury much, the earth will consume the corps in far shorter time than other earth will.

Bacon.

No place so sacred from such fops is barr'd; Nor is Paul's church more safe than Paul's churchyard.

Pope.

CICATRIX. n. f. [cicatrix, Latin.]

1. The scar remaining after a wound.

One captain Spurio, with his cicatrice, an emblem of war, bore on his sinister cheek. Shak.

2. A mark; an impression: so used by Shakspere less properly.

Lean but upon a ruff, The cicatrice and capable imprefure Thy palm some moments keeps. Shakspere.

CICATRISANT. n. f. [from cicatrice.] An application that induces a cicatrice.

CICATRISIVE. adj. [from cicatrice.] Having the qualities proper to induce a cicatrice.

CICATRIZATION. n. f. [from cicatrice.]

1. The act of healing the wound.

A vein burst, or corroded, in the lungs, is looked upon to be for the most part incurable, because of the motion and coughing of the lungs, tearing the gap wider, and hindering the coagulation and cicatrization of the vein. Harvey.

2. The state of being healed, or skinned over.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is called digestion; the second, or the filling up with flesh, incarnation; and the last, or skinning over, cicatrization. Sharp's Surgery.

To CICATRIZE. v. a. [from cicatrix.]

1. To apply such medicines to wounds, or ulcers, as heal and skin them over.

2. To heal and induce the skin over a sore.

We incarnated, and in a few days cicatrized it with a smooth cicatrix. Wifeman on Tumours.

CICELY. n. f. [myrrhis.] A sort of herb.

CICHO'RA'GROUS. adj. [from cichorium, Lat.] Having the qualities of succory.

CICH-PEA. n. f. [cicer.] A plant.

To CICURATE. v. a. [cicuro, Latin.] To tame; to reclaim from wildness; to make tame and tractable.

Poisons may yet retain some portion of their natures; yet are so refracted, cicurated, and subdued, as not to make good their destructive malignities. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CICURATION. n. f. [from cicurate.] The act of taming or reclaiming from wildness.

This holds not only in domestick and mansuete birds, for then it might be the effect of cicuration or institution; but in the wild. Ray.

CIDER. n. f. [cidre, Fr. sidra, Ital. sicera, Lat. cider, Heb. שדר]

1. All kind of strong liquors, except wine. This sense is now wholly obsolete.

2. Liquor made of the juice of fruits pressed.

We had also drink, wholesome and good wine of the grape, a kind of cider made of a fruit of that country; a wonderful pleasing and refreshing drink. Bacon.

3. The juice of apples expressed and fermented. This is now the sense.

To the utmost bounds of this Wide universe Salubrious cider burn, Shall please all taster, and triumph o'er the vine. Philips.

CIDRIST. n. f. [from cider.] A maker of cider.

When the ciderists have taken care for the best fruit, and ordered them after the best manner they could, yet hath their cider generally proved pale, sharp, and ill tasted. Mortimer.

CIDREIN. n. f. [from cider.] The liquor made of the muck or gross matter of apples, after the cider is pressed out, and a convenient quantity of boiled water added to it; the whole infusing for about forty-eight hours. Phillips.

CIL'ARY. adj. [cilium, Lat.] Belonging to the eyelids.

The ciliary processes, or rather the ligaments, observed in the inside of the sclerotic tunicle of the eye, do serve instead of a muscle, by the contraction, to alter the figure of the eye. Roy.

CIL'ICIOUS. adj. [from cilicium, hair-cloth, Lat.] Made of hair.

A garment of camel's hair, that is, made of some texture of that hair; a coarse garment, a cilicium or sackcloth habit, suitable to the austerity of his life. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CIMA'R. See SIMAR.

CIME'LIARCH. n. f. [from καμυλαρχος.] The chief keeper of plate, vestments, and things of value, belonging to a church; a church-warden. Did.

CI'METER. n. f. [cimitarra, Span. and Portug. from cimeter, Turkish. Bluteau's Portuguese Dictionary.] A sort of sword used by the Turks, short, heavy, and recurved, or bent backward.

This word is sometimes erroneously spelt scimitar, and scymitar; as in the following examples.

By this scimitar, That flew the sophy and a Persian prince, That won three fields of sultan Solymen. Shaksp.

Our armour now may rust, our idle scymitars Hang by our sides for ornament, not use. Dryden.

CIN'CTURE. n. f. [cinclura, Lat.]

1. Something worn round the body.

Now happy he, whose cloak and cinclure Hold out this tempest. Shakspere.

Columbus found th' American so girt With feather'd cinclure, naked else, and wild. Milton.

The court and prison being within the cinclure of one wall. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. [In architecture.] A ring or list at the top and bottom of the shaft of a column; separating the shaft at one end from the base, at the other from the capital. It is supposed to be in imitation of the girths or ferrills anciently used to strengthen and preserve the primitive wood columns. Chambers.

CINDER. n. f. [cindre, French, from cineres, Lat.]

1. A mass ignited and quenched, without being reduced to ashes.

I should make very forges of my cheeks, That would to cinders burn up modesty, Did but I speak thy deeds! Shakspere.

There is in smiths' cinders, by some adhesion of iron, sometimes to be found a magnetical operation. Brown.

So snow on Atna does unmelted lie, Whose rolling flames and scatter'd cinders fly. Waller.

2. A hot coal that has ceased to flame.

CIN

If from adown the hopeful chopes
The fat upon a cinder drops,
To flinking smoke it turns the flame. Swift.
CINDER-WENCH. } n. f. [cinder and woman.]
CINDER-WOMAN. } man. A woman whose trade is to rake in heaps of ashes for cinders.

'Tis under so much nasty rubbish laid,
To find it out 's the cinder-woman's trade.

Essay on Satire

She had above five hundred suits of fine cloaths, and yet went abroad like a cinder-wench. Arbuth.

In the black form of cinder-wench the came,
When love, the hour, the place, had banish'd shame. Gay.

CINERATION. n. f. [from cineres, Lat.] The reduction of any thing by fire to ashes. A term of chymiltry.

CINERITIOUS. adj. [cinericius, Latin.]

CINNABAR. n. f. [cinnabaris, Lat.] Cinnabar is native or factitious: the facti-tious cinnabar is called vermilion.

Cinnabar is the ore out of which quicksilver is drawn, and consists partly of a mercurial, and partly of a sulphureo-ochreous matter.

Woodward's Met. Efflu.

The particles of mercury uniting with the particles of sulphur compose cinnabar. Newton.

CINNABAR of Antimony, is made of mercury, sulphur, and crude antimony.

CINNAMON. n. f. [cinnamomum, Latin.]
The fragrant bark of a low tree in the island of Ceylon. Its leaves resemble those of the olive, both as to substance and colour. The fruit resembles an acorn or olive, and has neither the smell nor taste of the bark. When boiled in water, it yields an oil, which as it cools and hardens, becomes as firm and white as tallow; the smell of which is agreeable in candles. The cinnamon of the ancients was different from ours.

Chambers.

Let Araby extol her happy coast,
Her cinnamon and sweet anionum boast. Dryden.

CINNAMON Water is made by distilling the bark, first infused in barley water, in spirit of wine or white wine.

Chambers.

CINQUE. n. f. [French.] A five. It is used in games alone; but is often compounded with other words.

CINQUE-FOIL. n. f. [cinque feuille, Fr.]
A kind of five-leaved clover.

CINQUE-PAVE. n. f. [cinque pas, Fr.] A kind of grave dance.

Wooing, wedding, and repenting, is a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque-pave. The first suit is but and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding mannerly and modest, as a measure full of state and gravity; and then comes repentance, and, with his bad legs, falls into the cinque-pave faster and faster, till he finks into his grave. Shakespeare.

CINQUE-PORTS. n. f. [cinque ports, Fr.]

Those havens that lie towards France, and therefore have been thought by our kings to be such as ought most vigilantly to be observed against invasion. In which respect, the places where they are have a special government or keeper, called

CIR

by his office Lord Warden of the cinque-ports;
and divers privileges granted to them, as a particular jurisdiction; their warden having the authority of an admiral among them, and sending out writs in his own name. The cinque-ports are Dover, Sandwich, Rye, Hastings, Winchelsea, Rumney, and Hith; some of which, as the number exceeds five, must either be added to the first institution by some later grant, or accounted as appendants to some of the rest. Crowell.

They, that bear

The cloth of state above her, are four barons of the cinque-ports. Shakespeare.

CINQUE-SPOTTED. adj. Having five spots.

On her left breast

A mole, cinque-spotted, like the crimson drops
I' th' bottom of a cowslip. Shakespeare.

C'RON. n. f. [scion, or scion, French.]

1. A sprout; a shoot from a plant.

We have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbitted lusts; whereof I take this, that you call love, to be a fect or cron.

Shakespeare.

The stately Caledonian oak newly settled in his triumphant throne, begirt with crons of his own royal stem. Howel.

2. The shoot engrafted or inserted on a stock.

The cron over-rueth the stock; and the stock is but passive, and giveth alimant, but no motion, to the graft. Bacon.

CIPHER. n. f. [chifre, French; zifra, Italian; zifra, low Lat. from an oriental root.]

1. An arithmetical character, by which some number is noted; a figure.

2. An arithmetical mark, which, standing for nothing itself, increases the value of the other figures.

Mine were the very ciphers of a function,
To find the faults, whose fine stands in record,
And let go by the actor. Shakespeare.

If the people be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or ciphers in the privation or translation. Bacon.

As, in accounts, ciphers and figures pass for real sums, so names pass for things. South.

3. An intertexture of letters engraved usually on boxes or plate.

Troy flam'd in burnish'd gold; and o'er the throne,

ARMS AND THE MAN in golden ciphers shone.

Pope.

Some mingling stir the melted tar, and some Deep on the new-burnt vagrant's heaving side
To stamp the master's cipher ready stand. Thomf.

4. A character in general.

In succeeding times this wisdom began to be written in ciphers and characters, and letters bearing the form of creatures. Ralph.

5. A secret or occult manner of writing, or the key to it.

This book, as long liv'd as the elements,
In cipher writ, or new-made idioms. Donne.

He was pleased to command me to stay at London, to send and receive all his letters; and I was furnished with mine several ciphers, in order to it. Denham.

To CIPHER. v. n. [from the noun.] To practise arithmetick.

You have been bred to business; you can cipher; I wonder you never used your pen and ink. Arbuthnot.

To CIPHER. v. a. To write in occult characters.

He frequented sermons, and penned notes:
his notes he ciphered with Greek characters.

Hayward.

To CIRCINATE. v. a. [circino, Lat.] To make a circle; to compass round, or turn round. Bailey.

CIRCINATION. n. f. [circinatio, Lat.]

CIR

An orbicular motion; a turning round;
a measuring with the compasses. Bailey.

CIRCLE. n. f. [circulus, Latin.]

1. A line continued till it ends where it began, having all its parts equidistant from a common centre.

Any thing that moves round about in a circle,
in less time than our ideas are wont to succeed one another in our minds, is not perceived to move; but seems to be a perfect intire circle of that matter, or colour, and not a part of a circle
in motion. Locke.

By a circle I understand not here perfect geometrical circle, but an orbicular figure, whose length is equal to its breadth; and which, as to sense, may seem circular. Newton's Opticks.

Then a deeper still,

In circle following circle, gathers round
To close the face of things. Thomson's Summer.

2. The space included in a circular line.

3. A round body; an orb.

It is he that fitteth upon the circle of the earth.

Isaiah.

4. Compass; enclosure.

A great magician,
Obscured in the circle of the forest. Shakespeare.

5. An assembly surrounding the principal person.

To have a box where eunuchs sing,
And, foremost in the circle, eye a king. Pope.

6. A company; an assembly.

I will call over to him the whole circle of beauties that are disposed among the boxes.

Addison.

Ever since that time, Lisander visits in every circle. Tatler.

7. Any series ending as it begins, and perpetually repeated.

There be fruit trees in hot countries, which have blossoms and young fruit, and young fruit and ripe fruit, almost all the year, succeeding one another; but this circle of ripening cannot be but in succulent plants, and hot countries. Bacon.

Thus in a circle runs the peasant's pain,
And the year rolls within itself again. Dryden.

8. An inconclusive form of argument, in which the foregoing proposition is proved by the following, and the following proposition inferred from the foregoing.

That heavy bodies descend by gravity; and again, that gravity is a quality whereby an heavy body descends, is an impertinent circle, and teacheth nothing. Glavin's Logic.

That fallacy called a circle, is when one of the premises in a syllogism is questioned and opposed, and we intend to prove it by the conclusion.

Watts' Logic.

9. Circumlocution; indirect form of words.

Has he given the lye
In circle or oblique, or semicircle,
Or direct parallel? You must challenge him.

Fletcher's Q. of Car.

10. CIRCLES of the German empire. Such provinces and principalities as have a right to be present at diets. They are in number ten. Trevoux.

To CIRCLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To move round any thing.

The lords, that were appointed to circle the hill, had some days before planted themselves in places convenient. Bacon.

Another Cynthia her new journey runs,
And other planets circle other suns. Pope.

2. To enclose; to surround.

What stern ungentle hands
Have lopp'd and hew'd, and made thy body bare
Of her two branches, those sweet ornaments, Whose circling shadows kings have sought to keep in? Shakespeare.

C I R

While these fond arms, thus etcling you, may prove
More heavy chains than those of hopeless love.

Prior.

Unseen, he glided thro' the joyous crowd,
With darkness circled and an ambient cloud.

Pope.

3. To CIRCLE in. To confine; to keep together.

We term those things dry which have a consistence within themselves, and which, to enjoy a determinate figure, do not require the stop or hindrance of another body to limit and circle them in.

Digby on Bodies

To CIRCLE v. n. To move circularly; to end where it begins.

The well fraught bowl

Circles incessant; whilst the humble cell

With quavering laugh and rural jets resounds.

Philips.

Now the circling years disclose

The day predestin'd to reward his woes.

Pope.

CIRCLED adj. [from circle.] Having the form of a circle; round.

Th' incessant moon,

That monthly changes in her circled orb.

Shaksp.

There are four moons also perpetually toiling round the planet Jupiter, and carried along with him in his periodical circuit round the sun.

Watts on the Mind.

2. The space enclosed in a circle.

He led me up

A woody mountain, whose high top was plain,

A circuit wide inclos'd.

Milton's Par. Lost.

3. Space, or extent, measured by travelling round.

He attributeth unto it smallness, in respect of circuit.

Hooker.

The lake of Bolsena is reckoned one-and-twenty miles in circuit.

Addison on Italy.

4. A ring; a diadem; that by which any thing is incircled.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage, Until the golden circuit on my head Do calm the fury of this mad-brain'd law.

Shaksp.

5. The visitations of the judges for holding assizes.

The circuit, in former times, went but round about the pale; as the circuit of the cynosura about the pole.

Davies.

6. The track of country visited by the judges.

7. Long deduction of reason.

Up into the watch tower get, And see all things despoil'd of fallacies; Thou shalt not peep thro' Lattices of eyes, Nor hear thro' labyrinths of ears, nor learn By circuit or collections to discern.

Danvers.

CIRCUIT of action. [In law.] Is a longer course of proceeding to recover the thing sued for than is needful.

Cowell.

Addison.

2. Successive in order; always returning.

From whence th' innumerable race of things By circular successive order springs.

Roscommon.

3. Vulgar; mean; circumforaneous.

Had Virgil been a circular poet, and closely adhered to history, how could the Romans have had D do?

Dennis.

4. Ending in itself: used of a paralogism, where the second proposition at once proves the first, and is proved by it.

One of Cartes's first principles of reasoning, after he had doubted of every thing, seems to be too circular to safely build upon; for he is for proving the being of God from the truth of our faculties, and the truth of our faculties from the being of a God.

Baker's Reflect. on Learning.

5. CIRCULAR Letter. A letter directed to several persons, who have the same interest in some common affair; as in the convocation of assemblies.

6. CIRCULAR Lines. Such straight lines as are divided from the divisions made in the arch of a circle; as the lines of sines, tangents, and secants, on the plain scale and sector.

7. CIRCULAR Sailing, is that performed on the arch of a great circle.

CIRCULARITY n. f. [from circular.] A circular form.

The heavens have no diversity or difference, but a simplicity of parts, and equiformity in motion, continually succeeding each other; so that, from what point soever we compute, the account will be common unto the whole circularity.

Brown.

CIRCULARLY adv. [from circular.]

1. In form of a circle.

The internal form of it consists of several regions, involving one another like orbs about the same centre; or of the several elements cast circularly about each other.

Burnet.

2. With a circular motion.

Trade, which, like blood, should circularly flow,

Stopp'd in their channels, found its freedom lost.

Dryden.

Every body, moved circularly about any centre, recedes, or endeavours to recede, from that centre of its motion.

Ray.

To CIRCLE v. n. [from circulus.]

1. To move in a circle; to run round; to return to the place whence it departed in a constant course.

If our lives motions theirs must imitate, Our knowledge like our blood must circulate.

Denham.

Nature is a perpetual motion; and the work of the universe circulates without any interval or repose.

L'Estrange.

2. To be dispersed.

C I R

As the mints of calumny are perpetually at work, a great number of curious inventions, issued out from time to time, grow current among the party, and circulate through the whole kingdom.

Addison.

To CIRCULATE v. a. To put about.

In the civil wars, the money spent on both sides was circulated at home; no publick debts contracted.

Swift.

CIRCULATION n. f. [from circulate.]

1. Motion in a circle; a course in which the motion tends to the point from which it began.

What more obvious, one would think, than the circulation of the blood, unknown till the last age?

Burnet's Theory.

As much blood passeth through the lungs as through all the rest of the body: the circulation is quicker, and heat greater, and their texture extremely delicate.

Richardson on Aliments.

2. A series in which the same order is always observed, and things always return to the same state.

As for the sins of peace, thou hast brought upon us the miseries of war; so for the sins of war, thou seem'st fit to deny us the blessing of peace, and to keep us in a circulation of miseries.

King Charles.

God, by the ordinary rule of nature, permits this continual circulation of human things.

Swift.

3. A reciprocal interchange of meaning.

When the apostle saith of the Jews, that they crucified the Lord of glory; and when the Son of man, being on earth, affirmeth that the Son of man was in heaven at the same instant, there is in these two speeches that mutual circulation before mentioned.

Hooker.

CIRCULATORY n. f. [from circulate.] A chymical vessel, in which that which rises from the vessel on the fire is collected and cooled in another fixed upon it, and falls down again.

The rest of it, being more gross and ponderous, does not move far; but lodges in the clefts, crags, and sides of the rocks, near the bottoms of them. Woodward.

2. In farriery.

Clefts appear on the bought of the pasterns, and are caused by a sharp and malignant humour, which frets the skin; and it is accompanied with pain, and a noisome stench. Farrier's Dict.

His horse it is the heralds west;
 No, 'tis a mare, and hath a cleft. Ben Jonson.

To CLEFTGRAFT. v. a. [cleft and graft.]

To engraft by cleaving the stock of a tree, and inserting a branch.

Filberts may be cleftgrafted on the common nut. Mortimer.

CLEMENCY. n. f. [clemence, Fr. clementia, Latin.]

1. Mercy; remission of severity; willingness to spare; tenderness in punishing.

I have stated the true notion of clemency, mercy, compassion, good-nature, humanity, or whatever else it may be called, so far as is consistent with wisdom. Addison.

2. Mildness; softness.

Then in the clemency of upward air
 We'll scour our spots, and the dire thunder fear. Dryden.

CLEMENT. adj. [clemens, Lat.] Mild; gentle; merciful; kind; tender; compassionate.

You are more clement than vile men,
 Who of their broken debtors take a third,
 Letting them thrive again on the abatement. Shakspeare.

CLENCH. See CLINCH.

To CLEPE. v. a. [clépan, Sax.] To call.

Obsolete.
 Three crabbed months had fow'd themselves to death,
 Ere I could make thee open thy white hand,
 And clepe thyself my love. Shakspeare.

CLERGY. n. f. [clergé, Fr. clerus, Lat. clericus.]

The body of men set apart by due ordination for the service of God.

We hold that God's clergy are a state which hath been, and will be as long as there is a church upon earth, necessary, by the plain word of God himself; a state whereunto the rest of God's people must be subject, as touching things that appertain to their soul's health. Hooker.

The convocation gave a greater sum
 Than ever, at one time, the long yet
 Did to his predecessors part withal. Shakspeare.

CLERGYMAN. n. f. [clergy and man.] A man in holy orders; a man set apart for ministrations of holy things; not a laick.

How I have sped among the clergymen,
 The sums I have collected shall express. Shakspeare.
 It seems to be in the power of a reasonable clergyman to make the most ignorant man comprehend his duty. Swift.

CLE'RICAL. adj. [clericus, Lat.] Relating to the clergy: as, a clerical man, a man in orders.

In clericali the keys are lined, and in colleges they use to line the table-men. Bacon.

Unless we may more properly read clarichords.

CLERK. n. f. [cleric, Sax. clericus, Latin.]

1. A clergyman.

All persons were filed clerks, that served in the church of Christ, whether they were bishops, priests, or deacons. Arbuthnot.

2. A scholar; a man of letters.

They might talk of book-learning what they would; but, for his part, he never saw more uneasy fellows than great clerks were. Stanhope.
 The greatest clerks being not always the honestest, any more than the wisest, men. Stanhope.

3. A man employed under another as a writer.

My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
 Unto the judge; and then the boy, his clerk,
 That took some pains in writing, he begg'd mine. Shakspeare.

My friend was in doubt whether he could not exert the justice upon such a vagrant; but not having his clerk with him, who is a necessary counsellor, he let the thought drop. Addison.

4. A petty writer in public offices; an officer of various kinds.

Take a just view, how many may remark
 Who's now a lord, his grandfire was a clerk. Granville.

It may seem difficult to make out the bills of fare for the suppers of Vitellius. I question not but an expert clerk of a kitchen can do it. Arbuthnot.

5. The layman who reads the responses to the congregation in the church, to direct the rest.

CLERKSHIP. n. f. [from clerk.]

1. Scholarship.

2. The office of a clerk of any kind.

He sold the clerkship of his parish, when it became vacant. Swift's Miscellaneous.

CLEVE. } In composition, at the beginning or end of the proper name

CLIVE. } of a place, denotes it to be situated on the side of a rock or hill: as, Cleveland, Clifton, Standliff.

CLEVER. adj. [of no certain etymology.]

1. Dextrous; skilful.

It was the cleverer mockery of the two. D'Ejpharage.
 I read Dyer's letter more for the stile than the news. The man has a clever pen, it must be owned. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Just; fit; proper; commodious.

I can't but think 'twould sound more clever,
 To me, and to my heirs for ever. Pope.

3. Well-shaped; handsome.

She called him gandy-guts, and he called her lousy Peg, though the girl was a tight clever wench as any was. Arbuthnot.

4. This is a low word, scarcely ever used but in burlesque or conversation; and applied to any thing a man likes, without a settled meaning.

CLEVERLY. adv. [from clever.] Dextrously; fitly; handsomely.

These would inveigle rats with th' scent,
 And sometimes catch them with a snap,
 As cleverly as th' ablest trap. Hudibras.

A rogue upon the highway may have as strong an arm, and take off a man's head as cleverly, as the executioner. South.

CLEVERNESS. n. f. [from clever.] Dexterity; skill; accomplishment.

CLEW. n. f. [clipe, Sax. klouwen, Dut.] 1. Thread wound upon a bottom; a ball of thread.

Eschews untwisting his deceitful claw,
He 'gan to weave a web of wicked guile. Spenser.
While, guided by some claw of heav'nly thread,
The perplex'd labyrinth we backward tread.

Recommon.

They see small claws draw vastest weights along,
Not in their bulk, but in their order, strong. Dryden.

2. A guide; a direction: because men direct themselves by a claw of thread in a labyrinth.

This alphabet must be your own claw to guide you. Holder.

Is there no way, no thought, no beam of light?
No claw to guide me through this gloomy maze,
To clear my honour yet preserve my faith! Smith.

The reader knows not how to transport his thoughts over to the next particular, for want of some claw, or connecting idea, to lay hold of.

Watts' Logic.

3. Clew of the sail of a ship, is the lower corner of it, which reaches down to that earing where the tackles and sheets are fastened. Harris.

To CLEW. v. a. [from claw, a sea term.] To claw the sails, is to raise them, in order to be furled; which is done by a rope fastened to the claw of a sail, called the claw-garnet. Harris.

To CLICK. v. n. [cliken, Dutch; cliquer, French; or perhaps the diminutive of clack.] To make a sharp, small, successive noise.

The solemn death-watch click'd, the hour she died;

And shrilling crickets in the chimney cried. Gay.

CLICKER. n. f. [from click.] A low word for the servant of a salesman, who stands at the door to invite customers.

CLICKET. n. f. [from click.] The knocker of a door. Skinner.

CLIENT. n. f. [cliens, Latin.]

1. One who applies to an advocate for counsel and defence.

There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation, where causes are well handled; for that upholds in the client the reputation of his counsel. Bacon's Essays.

Advocates must deal plainly with their clients, and tell the true state of their case. Taylor.

2. It may be perhaps sometimes used for a dependant in a more general sense, as it was used among the Romans.

I do think they are your friends and clients,
And fearful to disturb you. Ben Jonson.

CLIENTED. particip. adj. [from client.] Supplied with clients.

This due occasion of discouragement, the worst conditioned and least cliented petivoguers do yet, under the sweet bait of revenge, convert to a more plentiful prosecution of actions. Carew.

CLIENTELE. n. f. [clientela, Lat.] The condition or office of a client. A word scarcely used.

There's Varus holds good quarters with him;
And, under the pretext of clientela,
Will be admitted. Ben Jonson.

CLIENTSHIP. n. f. [from client.] The condition of a client.

Patronage and clientship among the Romans always descended: the plebeian houses had recourse to the patrician line which had formerly protected them. Dryden.

VOL. I.

CLIFF. n. f. [clivus, Lat. clif, chop, Sax.]

1. A steep rock; a rock, according to Skinner, broken and craggy. [rupes.]

The Leucadians did use to precipitate a man from a high cliff into the sea. Bacon.

Mountaineers, that from Severus came,
And from the craggy cliffs of Tetrica. Dryden.

Wherever 'tis so found scattered upon the shores, there is it as constantly found lodged in the cliffs thereabouts. Woodward.

2. A character in music. Properly CLIFF. n. f. The same with CLIFF. Now disused.

Down he tumbled, like an aged tree,
High growing on the top of rocky cliff. Spenser.

CLIMATE. n. f. [κλιματη.] A certain space of time, or progression of years, which is supposed to end in a critical and dangerous time.

Elder times, settling their conceits upon climates, differ from one another. Brown.

CLIMATE'ICK. } adj. [from climate.]

CLIMATE'ICAL. } Containing a certain number of years, at the end of which some great change is supposed to befall the body.

Certain observable years are supposed to be attended with some considerable change in the body; as the seventh year; the twenty-fifth, made up of three times seven; the forty-ninth, made up of seven times seven; the sixty-third, being nine times seven; and the eighty-first, which is nine times nine: which two last are called the grand climate'icks.

The numbers seven and nine, multiplied into themselves, do make up sixty-three, commonly esteemed the great climate'ical of our lives.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Your lordship being now arrived at your great climate'ique, yet give no proof of the least decay of your excellent judgment and comprehension.

Dryden.

My mother is something better, though, at her advanced age, every day is a climate'ick. Pope.

CLIMATE. n. f. [κλίμα.]

1. A space upon the surface of the earth, measured from the equator to the polar circles; in each of which spaces the longest day is half an hour longer than in that nearer to the equator. From the polar circles to the poles, climates are measured by the increase of a month.

2. In the common and popular sense, a region, or tract of land, differing from another by the temperature of the air.

Between th' extremes, two happier climates hold
The temper that partakes of hot and cold. Dryden.

On what new happy climate are we thrown? Dryden.
This talent of moving the passions cannot be of any great use in the northern climates. Swift.

To CLIMATE. v. n. To inhabit. A word only in Shakspeare.

The blessed gods

Purge all infection from our air, whilst you Do climate here. Shakspeare.

CLIMATEURE. n. f. The same with CLIMATE. Not in use.

Such harbingers preceding still the fates,
Have heav'n and earth together demonstrated Unto our climateures and countrymen. Shakspeare.

CLIMAX. n. f. [κλίμαξ.] Gradation; ascent: a figure in rhetoric, by which the sentence rises gradually; as Cicero says to Catiline, Thou doest nothing, movest nothing, thinkest nothing; but I hear it, I see it, and perfectly understand it.

Choice between one excellency and another is difficult; and yet the conclusion, by a due climax, is evermore the best. Dryden's Jov. Dedication.
Some radiant Richmond every age has grac'd,
Still rising in a climax, till the last,
Surpassing all, is not to be surpass'd. Granville.

To CLIMB. v. n. pret. clomb or climbed; part. clomb or climbed. It is pronounced like clime. [climan, Sax. klimmen, Dutch.] To ascend up any place; to mount by means of some hold or footing. It implies labour and difficulty, and successive efforts.

You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire. Shakspeare.

When shall I come to th' top of that same hill?—

—You do climb up it now. Look, how we labour. Shakspeare.

Jonathan climbed up upon his hands and upon his feet. 1 Sam.

As a thief

Into the window climbs, or o'er the tiles,
So clomb the first grand thief into God's fold. Milton.

Thou soul of this great world both eye and soul,
Acknowledge him thy greater; sound his praise
In thy eternal course, both when thou climb'st,
And when high noon hath gain'd, and when thou
-fall'st. Milton's Par. Lost.

No rebel Titan's sacrilegious crime,
By heaping hills on hills, can thither climb. Recommon.

Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day. Dryden.

What controuling cause
Makes waters, in contempt of nature's laws,
Climb up, and gain th' aspiring mountain's height? Blackmore.

To CLIMB. v. a. To ascend; to mount. Is 't not enough to break into my garden, Climbing my walls in spite of me the owner? Shakspeare.

Thy arms pursue
Paths of renown, and climb ascents of fame. Prior.

Forlorn he must and persecuted fly;
Climb the steep mountain, in the cavern lie. Prior.

CLIMBER. n. f. [from climb.]

1. One that mounts or scales any place or thing; a mounter; a rifer.

I wait not at the lawyer's gates,
Ne shoulder climbers down the stairs. Carew.

Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face. Shakspeare.

2. A plant that creeps upon other supports. Ivy, briony, honey-suckles, and other climbers must be dug up. Mortimer.

3. The name of a particular herb.

The feeds are gathered into a little head, ending in a kind of rough plume; whence it is called by the country people old man's beard. Miller.

To CLIMBER. v. n. [from clamber.] To mount with effort; to climb.

In scaling the youngest to pluck off his becke,
Beware how ye climber for breaking your neck. Tupper.

CLIME. n. f. [contracted from climate, and therefore properly poetical.] Climate; region; tract of earth.

He can spread thy name o'er land and seas,
Whatever clime the sun's bright circle warms. Milton.

They apply the celestial description of other climes unto their own. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
Of beauty sing, her shining progress view,
From clime to clime the dazzling light pursue. Granville.

We shall meet
In happier climes, and on a safer shore. Addison.

Health to vigorous bodies, or fruitful seasons
In temperate climes, are common and familiar blessings. Atterbury.

To CLINCH. v. a. [climāx, Saxon, to knock, Junius; clingo, in Festus, to encamp, Minshew.]

1. To hold in the hand with the fingers bent over it.

Simois rows the bodies and the shields
Of heroes, whose dismember'd hands yet bear
The dart aloft, and clink the pointed spear. Dryden.

2. To contract or double the fingers.

Their tallest trees are about seven feet high, the tops whereof I could but just reach with my fist clinked. Swift.

3. To bend the point of a nail on the other side.

4. To confirm; to fix: as, to clinch an argument.

CLINCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A word used in a double meaning; a pun; an ambiguity; a duplicity of meaning, with an identity of expression. How it obtains this meaning is difficult to find. A nail caught on the other side, and doubled, is a nail clinched: a word taken in a different meaning, and doubled in sense, is likewise a clinch.

Such as they are, I hope they will prove, without a clinch, luciferous; searching after the nature of light. Boyle.

Pure clinches the suburban muse affords,
And Panton waging harmless war with words. Dryden.

Here one poor word a hundred clinches makes. Pope.

2. That part of the cable which is fastened to the ring of the anchor.

CLINCHER. n. f. [from clinch.] A cramp; a holdfast; a piece of iron bent down to fasten planks.

The wimbles for the work Calypso found;
With those he pierc'd 'em, and with clinchers bound. Pope.

To CLING. v. n. pret. I clung; part. I have clung. [kynger, Danish.]

1. To hang upon by twining round; to stick to; to hold fast upon.

The broil long doubtful stood;
As two spent swimmers that do cling together,
And choke their art. Shakspeare.

The fontanel in his neck was deferred by the clinging of his hair to the plaster. Wifeman.

When they united and together clung,
When undistinguish'd in one heap they hung. Blackmore.

See in the circle next Eliza plac'd,
Two babes of love close clinging to her waist. Pope.

That they may the closer cling,
Take your blue ribbon for a string. Swift.

2. To adhere, as followers or friends.

Most popular consul he is grown, methinks!
How the rout clung to him! Ben Jonson.

3. To dry up; to consume; to waste; to pine away. [ceclungen treow, a withered tree.]

If thou speak'st false,
Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive,
Till famine clung thee. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

CLINGY. adj. [from cling.] Apt to cling; adhesive.

CLINICAL. } adj. [κλινος, to lie down.]

CLINICK. } Those that keep their beds;
those that are sick, past hopes of recovery. A clinical lecture is a discourse upon a disease, made by the bed of the patient.

A clinical convert, one that is converted on his deathbed. This word occurs often in the works of Taylor.

To CLINK. v. a. [perhaps softened from clank, or corrupted from click.] To strike so as to make a small sharp noise.

Five years! a long lease for the clinking of powder. Shakspeare.

To CLINK. v. n. To utter a small, sharp, interrupted noise.

The fever'd bars
Submissive clink against your brazen portals. Prior.

Underneath th' umbrella's oily shed,
Safe thro' the wet on clinking pavers tread. Gay.

CLINK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A sharp successive noise; a knocking.

I heard the clink and fall of swords. Shakspeare.

2. It seems in Spenser to have some unusual sense. I believe the knocker of a door. Tho' creeping close, behind the wicket's clink, Privily he peeped out thro' a clink. Spenser.

CLINQUANT. adj. [French.] Dressed in embroidery, in frangles, false glitter, tinsel finery.

To-day the French,
All cliquant, all in gold, like heathen gods, Shone down the English. Shakspeare.

To CLIP. v. a. [clippan, Saxon.]

1. To embrace, by throwing the arms round; to hug; to enfold in the arms.

He that before shunn'd her, to shun such harm,
Now runs and takes her in his clipping arms. Sid.

Here I clip
The anvil of my sword, and do contest
Hotly and nobly with thy love. Shakspeare.

O nation, that thou couldst remove
That Neptune's arms, who clippeth thee about. Shakspeare.

Enter the city; clip your wives, your friends;
Tell them your fears. Shakspeare.

The jades
That drag the tragick melancholy night,
Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings,
Clip dead men's graves. Shakspeare.

The male reflect on the back of the female, clipping and embracing her with his legs about the neck and body. Ray.

2. To cut with sheers. [klipper, Danish; klippen, Dutch; apparently from the same radical sense, since scissors cut by enclosing and embracing.]

Your sheers come too late to clip the bird's wings, that already is flown away. Shakspeare.

Then let him, that my love shall blame,
Or clip love's wings, or quench love's flame. Swetling.

He clips hope's wings, whose airy bliss
Much higher than fruition is. Denham.

But love had clipp'd his wings, and cut him
short,
Confin'd within the purlieus of his court. Dryd.

If mankind had had wings, as perhaps some extravagant atheists may think us deficient in that, all the world must have contented to clip them. Bentley.

By this lock, this sacred lock, I swear,
Which never more shall join its parted hair,
Clipp'd from the lovely head where late it grew. Pope.

He spent every day ten hours dozing, clipping papers, or darning his stockings. Swift.

3. Sometimes with off.

We should then have as much feeling upon the clipping off a hair, as the cutting of a nerve. Bentley's Sermons.

4. It is particularly used of those who diminish coin, by paring the edges.

This design of new coinage, is just of the nature of clipping. Luche.

5. To curtail; to cut short.

All my reports go with the modest truth;
Nor more, nor clip, but so. Shakspeare.

Mrs. Mayors clipped the king's English. Addison.

Even in London they clip their words after one manner about the court, another in the city, and a third in the suburbs. Swift.

6. To confine; to hold; to contain.

Where is he living, clipt in with the sea,
Who calls me pupil? Shakspeare.

To CLIP. v. n. A phrase in falconry.

Some falcon swoops at what her eye design'd,
And with her eagerness the quarry miss'd,
Straight flies at check, and clips it down the wind. Dryden.

CLIPPER. n. f. [from clip.] One that debases coin by cutting.

It is no English treason to cut
French crowns, and to narrow the king Himself will be a clipper. Shakspeare.

No coins pleased some medallists more than those which had passed through the hands of an old Roman clipper. Addison.

CLIPPING. n. f. [from clip.] The part cut or clipped off.

Beings purely material, without sense or thought, as the clippings of our beards, and parings of our nails. Lodge.

CLIVER. n. f. An herb. More properly written cleaver.

It grows wild, the seeds sticking to the clothes of such as pass by them. It is sometimes used in medicine. Müller.

CLOAK. n. f. [lach, Saxon.]

1. The outer garment, with which the rest are covered.

You may hear it
Under a cloak that is of any length. Shakspeare.

Their cloaks were cloth of silver, mix'd with gold. Dryden.

All arguments will be as little able to prevail, as the wind did with the traveller to part with his coat, which he held only the tighter. Lodge.

Nimble he rose, and cast his garment down;
That instant in his cloak I wrapt me round. Pope.

2. A concealment; a cover.

Not using your liberty for a cloak of malicious-ness. Peterson.

To CLOAK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with a cloak.

2. To hide; to conceal.

Most heavenly fair, in deed and view,
She by creation was, till she did fall;
Thenceforth she sought for help to cloak her crimes withal. Spenser.

CLOAKBAG. n. f. [from cloak and bag.]

A portmanteau; a bag in which clothes are carried.

Why dost thou converse with that trunk of humours, that stuffed cloakbag of guts? Shakspeare.

I have already fit
(Tis in my cloakbag) doublet, hat, hose, all
That answer to them. Shakspeare.

CLOCK. n. f. [clouc, Welsh, from clock,
a bell, Welsh and Armorick; cloche, French.]

1. The instrument which, by a series of mechanical movements, tells the hour
by a stroke upon a bell.

If a man be in sickness or pain, the time will seem longer without a clock or hour-glass than with it. Bacon.

The picture of Jerome usually described at his study, is with a clock hanging by. Brown.

I told the clocks, and watch'd the winking light. Dryden.

2. It is an usual expression to say, What is it of the clock, for What hour is it?

Or ten o'clock, for the tenth hour.

What is 't' o'clock?

Upon the stroke of four. Shakspeare.
Macbeth set forward about ten o'clock in the night. Kneller.

About nine of the clock at night the king marched out of the North-port. Clarendon.
3. The clock of a stocking; the flowers or inverted work about the ankle.

His stockings with silver clocks were ravished from him. Swift.

4. An insect; a sort of beetle. Dist.

CLOCKMAKER. n. f. [clock and maker.] An artificer whose profession is to make clocks.

This inequality has been diligently observed by several of our ingenious clockmakers, and equations been made and used by them. Derham.

CLOCKWORK. n. f. [from clock and work.] Movements by weights or springs, like those of a clock.

So if unprejudic'd you fear
The goings of this clockwork, man;
You find a hundred movements made
By fine devices in his head:

But 'tis the stomach's solid stroke,
That tells this being what's a clock. Prior.

Within this hollow was Vulcan's shop, full of fire and clockwork. Addison.

You look like a puppet moved by clockwork. Arbutnot.

CLOD. n. f. [club, Sax. a little hillock; klotte, Dutch.]

1. A lump of earth or clay; such a body of earth as cleaves or hangs together.

The earth that casketh up from the plough a great clod, is not so good as that which casketh up a smaller clod. Bacon.

I'll cut up, as plows
Do barren lands, and strike together flints

And clods, th' ungrateful scote and the people. Ben Jonson.

Who smooths with harrows, or who pounds with rakes,
The crumbling clods. Dryden.

2. A turf; the ground.

Byzantium's bough, that on the clod,
Where once their sultan's horse has trod,
Grows neither grass, nor shrub, nor tree. Swift.

3. Any thing concentered together in a cluster.

Fishermen who make holes in the ice to dip up fish with their nets, light on swallows concentered in clods of a slimy substance; and carrying them home to their stoves, the warmth restores them to life and flight. Grew.

4. A lump, a mass of metal.

One at the forge
Labouring, two massy clods of iron and brass
Had melted. Milton.

5. Any thing vile, base, and earthy; as the body of man compared to his soul.

And ye high heavens, the temple of the gods,
In which a thousand torches, flaming bright,
Do burn, that to us, wretched earthly clods,
In dreadful darkness lend desired light. Spenser.

The spirit of man,
Which God inspir'd, cannot together perish
With this corporeal clod. Milton's Par. Lost.

How the purer spirit is united to this clod, in a knot too hard for our degraded intellects to untie. Gloucester.

In moral reflections there must be heat, as well as dry reason, to inspire this cold clod of clay which we carry about with us. Burnet.

6. A dull, gross, stupid fellow; a dolt.

The vinegar! a fource animated clod,
Ne'er pleas'd with ought above 'em. Dryden.

To CLOD. v. n. [from the noun.] To gather into concretions; to coagulate; for this we sometimes use clot.

Let us go find the body, and from the stream,
With lavers pure, and cleansing herbs, wash off
The clouded gore. Milton.

To CLOD. v. a. [from the noun.] To pelt with clods.

CLODDY. adj. [from clod.]

1. Consisting of earth or clods; earthy; muddy; miry; mean; gross; base.

The glorious sun,
Turning with splendour of his precious eye
The meagre cloddy earth to glittering gold. Shak.

2. Full of clods unbroken.

These lands they sow always under furrow about Michaelmas, and leave it as cloddy as they can. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CLODPATE. n. f. [clod and pate.] A stupid fellow; a dolt; a thickskull.

CLODPATED. adj. [from clodpate.] Stupid; dull; doltish; thoughtless.

My clodpated relations spoiled the greatest genius in the world, when they bled me a mechanic. Arbutnot.

CLODPOLL. n. f. [from clod and poll.] A thickskull; a dolt; a blockhead.

This letter being so excellently ignorant, he will find that it comes from a clodpoll. Shakspeare.

To CLOG. v. n. [It is imagined by Skinner to come from log; by Casaubon derived from clod, a dog's collar, being thought to be first hung upon fierce dogs.]

1. To load with something that may hinder motion; to encumber with shackles; to impede, by fastening to the neck or leg a heavy piece of wood or iron.

If you find so much blood in his liver as will clog the foot of a flea, I'll eat the rest of the anatomy. Shakspeare.

Let a man wean himself from these worldly impediments, that here clog his soul's flight. Digby on the Soul.

The wings of birds were clogg'd with ice and snow. Dryden.

Fleishly lusts do debase men's minds, and clog their spirits, make them gross and foul, listless and unactive. Tilteson.

Gums and pomatums shall his sight restrain,
While clogg'd he beats his silken wings in vain. Pope.

2. To hinder; to obstruct.

The gutter'd rocks and congregated sands,
Traitors ensteep'd to clog the guiltless keel. Shak.
His majesty's ships were over-pestered and clogg'd with great ordnance, whereof there is superfluity. Raleigh.

3. To load; to burden; to embarrass.

Since thou hast far to go, bear not along
The clogging burthen of a guilty soul. Shakspeare.
You'll have the time
That clogs me with this answer. Shakspeare.

They land'd a veng, and watch'd returning breath;
It came, but clogg'd with symptoms of his death. Dryden.

All the commodities are clogg'd with impositions. Addison.

4. In the following passage it is improper, for its meaning always includes hindrance.

Clocks and jacks, though the screws and teeth of the wheel and nuts be never so smooth, yet, if they be not oiled, will hardly move; though you clog them with never so much weight. King.

To CLOG. v. n.

1. To coalesce; to adhere. In this sense, perhaps, only corruptly used for clod or clot.

Move it sometimes with a broom, that the seeds clog not together. Evelyn.

In working through the bone, the teeth of the saw will begin to clog. Sharp's Surgery.

CLOG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A load; a weight; any encumbrance hung upon any animal or thing to hinder motion

I'm glad at foul I have no other child;
For thy escape would teach me tyranny,
To hang clogs on them. Shakspeare.

I did but prompt the age to quit their clogs;
By the known rules of ancient liberty. Addison.

As a dog, committed close
For some offence, by chance breaks loose,
And quits his clog; but all in vain,
He still draws after him his chain. Hudibras.

2. An encumbrance; a hinderance; an obstruction; an impediment.

Weariness of the flesh is an heavy clog to the will. Hobbes.

They're our clogs, not their own; if a man be Chain'd to a galley, yet the galley's free. Donne.

Their prince made no other step than rejecting the pope's supremacy, as a clog upon his own power and passions. Swift.

Slavery is, of all things, the greatest clog and obstacle to speculation. Swift.

3. A kind of additional shoe, worn by women to keep them from wet.

4. A wooden shoe.

In France the peasantry goes barefoot; and the middle sort, throughout all that kingdom, makes use of wooden clogs. Harvey.

An inhabitant of Nova Zembla having lived in Denmark, where he was clothed, took the first opportunity of making his escape into nakedness. Addison's Freeholder.

The Britons, in Cæsar's time, painted their bodies, and clothed themselves with the skins of beasts. Swift.

With superior boon may your rich soil
Exuberant nature's better blessings pour O'er every land, the naked nation's clothes,
And be th' exhaustless granary of a world. Thomson.

2. To adorn with dress.

We clothe and adorn our bodies; indeed, too much time we bestow upon that. Our souls also are to be clothed with holy habits, and adorned with good works. Ray on Creation.

Embroider'd purple clothes the golden beds. Pope's Statius.

3. To invest, as with clothes.

I pass on righteousness, and it clothed me. Job.
Hail thou clothed his neck with thunder? Job.
I will also clothe her priests with salvation. Psalms.

If thou beest he; but O how fall'n! how chang'd

From him, who in the happy realms of light,
Cloth'd with transcendent brightness, did it out-shine

Myriads though bright! Milton.

They leave the shady realms of night,
And, cloth'd in bodies, breath your upper lights. Dryden.

Let both use the clearest language in which they can clothe their thoughts. Watts.

He dragg'd the trembling fire,
Slidd'ring thro' clotter'd blood and holy mire. Dryden's Æneid.

CLO'TTY. adj. [from clot.] Full of clods; concreted; full of concretions.

The matter expectorated is thin, and mixt with thick, clotted, bluish streaks. Harvey.
Where land is clotty, and a shower of rain soaks through, you may make use of a roll to break it. Mortimer.

CLOUD. n. f. [The derivation is not known. Minshew derives it from claudo, to shut; Sommer from clod; Casaubon from αἴθερ, darkness; Skinner from kladde, Dutch, a spot.]

1. The dark collection of vapours in the air.

Now are the clouds, that lower'd upon our house,

In the deep bosom of the ocean buried. Shaksf.
As a mist is a multitude of small but solid globules, which therefore descend; so a vapour, and therefore a watery cloud, is nothing else but a congeries of very small and concave globules, which therefore ascend, to that height in which they are of equal weight with the air, where they remain suspended, till, by some motion in the air, being broken, they descend in solid drops; either small, as in a mist; or bigger, when many of them run together, as in rain. Grew's Cosmologia.

Clouds are the greatest and most considerable of all the meteors, as furnishing water and plenty to the earth. They consist of very small drops of water, and are elevated a good distance above the surface of the earth; for a cloud is nothing but a mist flying high in the air, as a mist is nothing but a cloud here below. Locke.

How vapours, turn'd to clouds, obscure the sky;
And clouds, dissolv'd, the thirsty ground supply. Reformation.

The dawn is overcast, the morning low'rs,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day. Addis.

2. The veins, marks, or stains, in stones or other bodies.

3. Any state of obscurity or darkness.
Two poets may of inspiration boast,
Their rage, ill govern'd, in the clouds is lost. Waller.

How can I see the brave and young Fall in the cloud of war, and fall untung. Addis.
4. Any thing that spreads wide: as a crowd, a multitude.

The objection comes to no more than this,
that, amongst a cloud of witnesses, there was one of no very good reputation. Atterbury.

TO CLOUD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To darken with clouds; to cover with clouds; to obscure.

2. To make of fullen and gloomy appearance.

Be not dishearten'd then, nor cloud those looks,
That wont to be more cheerful and serene. Milt.
What fullen fury clouds his scornful brow! Pope.

3. To obscure; to make less evident.

If men would not exhale vapours to cloud and darken the clearest truths, no man could miss his way to heaven for want of light. Deacy of Piety.

4. To variegate with dark veins.

The handle smooth and plain,

sire; to forfeit; to fill to loathing.

The length of those speeches had not cloyed Pyrocles, though he were very impatient of long deliberations. Sidney.

The very cries of Athanasius, and that sacred hymn of glory, are reckoned as superfluities, which we must in any case pare away, lest we cloy God with too much service. Hosier.

Who can cloy the hunger of appetite
By bare imagination of a feast? Shakespeare.

Continually varying the same sense, and taking up what he had more than enough inculcated before, he sometimes cloyed his readers instead of satisfying them. Dryden.

Whose little more her well taught mind does please,
Nor pinch'd with want, nor cloy'd with wanton ease. Reformers.

Intemperance in eating and drinking, instead of delighting and satisfying nature, dulls but loads and *cloy*s it. Tal van.

As the substance of coagulation is not merely saline, nothing dissolves them but what penetrates and raises at the same time. Arbuthnot.

COAGULATIVE. adj. [from coagulate.]

That has the power of causing concretion, or coagulation.

To manifest the coagulative power, we have sometimes in a minute arrested the fluidity of new milk, and turned it into a coagulated substance, only by dexterously mingling with it a few drops of good oil of vitriol. Boyle.

COAGULATOR. n. f. [from coagulate.]

That which causes coagulation.

Coagulatores of the humours, are those things which expel the most fluid parts, as in the case of incrassating, or thickening; and by those things which suck up some of the fluid parts, as absorbents. Arbuthnot.

COAL. n. f. [col, Sax. kol, Germ. kole, Dut. kul, Danish.]

1. The common fossil fuel.

Coal is a black, sulphureous, inflammatory matter, dug out of the earth, serving for fuel, common in Europe, though the English coal is of most repute. One species of pit-coal is called cannel, or candle coal, which is found in the northern counties; hard, glossy, and light, apt to cleave into thin flakes, and, when kindled, yields a continual blaze till it be burnt out.

Coals are solid, dry, opaque, inflammable substances, found in large strata, splitting horizontally more easily than in any other direction; of a glossy hue, soft and friable, not fusible, but easily inflammable, and leaving a large residuum of ashes. Hill on Fossils.

But age, enforce'd, falls by her own consent;
As coals to ashes, when the spirit's spent. Denham.

We shall meet with the same mineral lodged in coals, that elsewhere we found in marble. Woodward's Natural History.

2. The cinder of scorched wood; charcoal.

Whatsoever doth to alter a body, as it returneth not again to that it was, may be called alteration major; as when cheese is made of curds, or coals of wood, or bricks of earth. Bacon.

3. Fire; any thing inflamed or ignited.

You are no surer, no,

Than is the coal of fire upon the ice.

Or hailstones in the sun. Shakspere.

You have blown this coal betwixt my lord and me. Shakspere.

The rage of jealousy then fir'd his soul,

And his face kindled like a burning coal. Dryd.

TO COAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To burn wood to charcoal.

Add the tinner's care and cost in buying the wood for this service; felling, framing, and piling it to be burnt; in fetching the same, when it is coaled, through such far, foul, and cumbersome ways. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Charcoal of roots, coaled into great pieces, lasts longer than ordinary charcoal. Bacon.

2. To delineate with coal.

Marvelling, he coaled out rhymes upon the wall, near to the picture. Camden.

COAL-BLACK. adj. [coal and black.] Black in the highest degree; of the colour of coal.

As burning Etna, from his boiling stew,
Doth belch out flames, and rocks in pieces broke,
And ragged ribs of mountains molten new,
Enwrought in coal-black clouds and filthy smoke. Fairy Queen.

Ethiopians and negroes become coal-black from fuliginous effluvia, and complexional tinctures. Brown.

Coal-black his colour, but like jet it shone;

His legs and flowing tail were white alone. Dryd.

COAL-BOX. n. f. [coal and box.] A box to carry coal to the fire.

Leave a part of dirty water, a coal-box, a bottle, a broom, and such other unfightly things. Swift.

COAL-FISH. n. f. [afellus niger.] A species of headless gadus.

COAL-MINE. n. f. [coal and mine.] A mine in which coal is dug; a coal pit.

Springs injure land, that flow from coal-mines. Mortimer.

COAL-PIT. n. f. [from coal and pit.] A pit made in the earth, generally to a great depth, for digging coal.

A leaf of the polypody kind, found in the sinking of a coal-pit. Woodward.

COAL-STONE. n. f. [coal and stone.] A sort of cannel coal. See COAL.

Coal-stone flames easily, and burns freely; but holds and endures the fire much longer than coal. Woodward.

COAL-WORK. n. f. [coal and work.] A coalery; a place where coal is found.

There is a vast treasure in the old English, from whence authors may draw constant supplies; as our officers make their surest remits from the coal-works and the mines. Felton.

COALERY. n. f. [from coal.] A place where coal is dug.

Two fine Salustian were found hanging from a black Roan, at a deserted vault in Linwell coalery. Woodward.

TO COALESCE. v. n. [coalesco, Latin.]

1. To unite in masses by a spontaneous approximation to each other.

When vapours are raised, they hinder not the transparency of the air, being divided into parts too small to cause any reflection in their superficies; but when they begin to coalesce, and constitute globules, those globules become of a convenient size to reflect some colours. Newton.

2. To grow together; to join.

COALESCENCE. n. f. [from coalesco.] The act of coalescing; concretion; union.

COALITION. n. f. [from coalesco, coalitum, Latin.] Union in one mass or body; conjunction of separate parts in one whole.

The world's a mass of heterogeneous confusions, and every part thereof a coalition of distinguishable varieties. Glanville.

In the first coalition of a people, their prospect is not great: they provide laws for their present exigence. Hale.

'Tis necessary that these squandered atoms should convene and unite into great masses: without such a coalition the chaos must have reigned to all eternity. Bentley.

COALY. adj. [from coal.] Containing coal.

Or coaly Tine, or ancient hallow'd Dee. Milt.

COAPTATION. n. f. [from con and apto, Lat.] The adjustment of parts to each other.

In a clock, the hand is moved upon the dial, the bell is struck, and the other actions belonging to the engine are performed, by virtue of the size, shape, bigness, and coaptation of the several parts. Boyle.

The same method makes both prose and verse beautiful, which consists in the judicious coaptation and ranging of the words. Brown.

TO COARCT. v. a. [coarcto,

TO COARCTATE. v. a. [coarcto, Latin.]

1. To straiten; to confine into a narrow compass.

The wind finding the room in the form of a trunk, and coarctated therein, forced the stones of the window, like pellets, clean through it.

Bacon.

2. To contract power; to restrain.

If a man coarctates himself to the extremity of an act, he must blame and impute it to himself, that he has thus coarcted or straitened himself so far.

Ayliffe.

COARCTATION. n. f. [from coarctate.]

1. Confinement; restraint to a narrow space.

The greatest winds, if they have no coarctation, or blow not hollow, give an intermitting sound.

Bacon.

2. Contraction of any space.

Straiten the astery never so much, provided the sides of it do not meet, the vessel will continue to heat, below or beyond the coarctation.

Ray.

3. Restraint of liberty.

Election is opposed not only to coaction, but also to coarctation, or determination to one.

Bramhall.

COARSE. adj.

1. Not refined; not separated from impurities or baser parts.

I feel

Of what coarse metal ye are molded.

Shakespeare.

2. Not soft or fine: used of cloth, of which the threads are large.

3. Rude; uncivil; rough of manners.

4. Gross; not delicate.

'Tis not the coarser type of human law That binds their peace.

Thomson.

5. Inelegant; rude; unpolished.

Praise of Virgil is against myself, for presuming to copy, in my coarse English, his beautiful expressions.

Dryden.

6. Not nicely expert; unfinished by art or education.

Practical rules may be useful to such as are remote from advice, and to coarse practitioners which they are obliged to make use of.

Arbuth.

7. Mean; not nice; not elegant; vile.

Ill comfort, and a coarse perfume, Disgrace the delicacy of a feast.

Rescuer.

A coarse and useless dunghill weed, Fix'd to one spot, to rot just as it grows.

Osway.

From this coarse mixture of terrestrial parts, Desire and fear by turns possess their hearts.

Dryden.

COARSELY. adv. [from coarse.]

1. Without fineness; without refinement.

2. Meanly; not elegantly.

John came neither eating nor drinking, but coarsely and poorly, according to the apparel he wore.

Brown.

3. Rudely; not civilly.

The good cannot be too much honoured, nor the bad too coarsely used.

Dryden.

4. Inelegantly.

Be pleased to accept the rudiments of Virgil's poetry, coarsely translated, but which yet retains some beauties of the author.

Dryden.

COARSENESS. n. f. [from coarse.]

1. Impurity; unrefined state.

First know the materials whereof the glass is made; then consider what the reason is of the coarseness or deamels.

Bacon's Essays.

2. Roughness; want of fineness.

3. Grossness; want of delicacy.

Friends (pardon the coarseness of the illustration) as dogs in couples, should be of the same size.

L'Estrange.

4. Roughness; rudeness of manners.

A base wild olive he remains; The shrub the coarseness of the clown retains.

Garth.

5. Meanness; want of nicety.

Consider the penuriousness of the Hollanders, the coarseness of their food and raiment, and their little indulgencies of pleasure.

Addison.

COAST. n. f. [coste, Fr. costa, Latin.]

1. The edge or margin of the land next the sea; the shore. It is not used for the banks of less waters.

He sees in English ships the Holland coast.

Dryden.

2. It seems to be taken by Newton for side, like the French coste. It was likewise so used by Bacon.

The south-east is found to be better for ripening of trees than the south-west; though the south-west be the hottest coast.

Bacon.

Some kind of virtue, lodged in some sides of the crystal, inclines and bends the rays towards the coast, of unusual refraction; otherwise the rays would not be refracted towards that coast rather than any other coast, both at their incidence and their emergence, so as to emerge by a contrary situation of the coast.

Newton's Opt.

3. The COAST is clear. [a proverbial expression.] The danger is over; the enemies have marched off.

Going out, and seeing that the coast was clear, Zelmance dismissed Mithridates.

Silvery.

The royal spy, when now the coast was clear, Sought not the garden, but retir'd unseen.

Dryden.

TO COAST. v. n. [from the noun.] To sail close by the coast; to sail within sight of land.

But steer my vessel with a steady hand, And coast along the shore in sight of land.

Dryden.

The ancients coasted only in their navigation, seldom taking the open sea.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

TO COAST. v. a. To sail by; to sail near to.

Nearchus, the admiral of Alexander, not knowing the compass, was fain to coast that shore.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The greatest entertainment we found in coasting it, were the several prospects of woods, vineyards, meadows, and corn-fields which lie on the borders of it.

Addison on Italy.

COASTER. n. f. [from coast.] He that sails timorously near the shore.

In our small skiff we must not launch too far; We here but coasters, not discoverers are.

Dryden.

COAT. n. f. [cotte, Fr. cotta, Italian.]

1. The upper garment.

He was armed with a coat of mail, and the weight of the coat was five thousand shekels of brass.

Samuel.

The coat of many colours they brought to their father, and said, this have we found: know now whether it be thy son's coat or no.

Genesis.

2. Petticoat; the habit of a boy in his infancy; the lower part of a woman's dress.

A friend's younger son, a child in coats, was not easily brought to his book.

Locke.

3. The habit or vesture, as demonstrative of the office.

For his intermeddling with arms, he is the more excusable, because many of his coat, in those times, are not only martial directors, but commanders.

Houssé's Vocal Force.

Men of his coat should be minding their prayers, And not among ladies, to give themselves airs.

Swift.

4. The hair or fur of a beast; the covering of any animal.

He chid

Their nakedness with skins of beasts; or stain, Or, as the snake, with youthful coat repaid; And thought not much to clothe his enemies.

Milton.

Give your horse some powder of brimstone in his oats, and it will make his coat lie fine.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

You have given us milk

In luscious streams, and lent us your own coat Against the winter's cold.

Thomson's Spring.

5. Any tegument, tunic, or covering.

The eye is defended with four coats or skins.

Peacham.

The optick nerves have their medullary parts terminating in the brain, their teguments terminating in the coats of the eye.

Derham.

Amber is a module, invested with a coat, called rock-amber.

Woodward on Fossils.

6. That on which the ensigns armorial are portrayed.

The herald of love's mighty king,

In whose coat armour richly are display'd All sorts of flowers the which on earth do spring.

Spenser.

Cropp'd are the flower-de-luces in your arms; Of England's coat one half is cut away.

Shakspeare.

At each trumpet was a banner bound, Which, waving in the wind, display'd at large Their master's coat of arms and knightly charge.

Dryden.

TO COAT. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover; to invest; to overspread: as, to coat a retort; to coat a ceiling.

TO COAX. v. a. To wheedle; to flatter; to humour. A low word.

The nurse had changed her note; she was muzzling and coaxing the child; that's a good dear, says she.

L'Estrange.

I coax! I wheedle! I'm above it.

Farquhar.

COAXER. n. f. [from the verb.] A wheedler; a flatterer.

COB. A word often used in the composition of low terms; corrupted from cop, Sax. kopp, Germ. the head or top.

COB. n. f.

1. A sort of sea-fowl; called also seacob.

Phillips.

2. In some provinces, and probably in old language, a spider; whence cobweb.

COBALT. n. f. A marcasite frequent in Saxony.

Cobalt is plentifully impregnated with arsenick; contains copper and some silver. Being sublimed, the fumes are of a blue colour: these German mineralists call zaffer.

Woodward.

Cobalt is a dense, compact, and ponderous mineral, very bright and shining, and much resembling some of the antimonial ores. It is found in Germany, Saxony, Bohemia, and England; but ours is a poor kind: From cobalt are produced the three sorts of arsenick, white, yellow, and red; as also zaffer and smalt.

Hale.

TO COBBLE. v. a. [kobler, Danish.]

1. To mend any thing coarsely: used generally of shoes.

If you be out, sir, I can mend you.—Why, sir, cobble you.

Shakspeare.

They'll sit by th' fire, and presume to know What's done i' th' capital, making parties strong, And feeble such as stand not in their liking Below their cobbled shoes.

Shakspeare.

Many underlayers, when they could not live upon their trade, have raised themselves from cobbling to huizing.

L'Estrange.

2. To do or make any thing clumsily, or unhandily.

Reject the nauseous praises of the times; Give thy base poets back their cobbled rhymes.

Dryden.

Believe not that the whole universe is mere bungling and blundering, nothing effected for any purpose or design, but all ill-favourably cobbled and jumbled together.

Bentley.

COBBLER. n. f. [from cobble.]

1. A mender of old shoes.

Not many years ago it happened that a cobbler had the casting vote for the life of a criminal.

Addison on Italy.

2. A clumsy workman in general.

What trade are you?

Truly, sir, in respect of a fine workman, I am but, as you would say, a cobbler. Shakspeare.

3. In a kind of proverbial sense, any mean person.

Think you the great prerogative 't' enjoy
Of doing ill, by virtue of that race?
As if what we esteem in cobbler's base
Would the high family of Brutus grace. Dryden.

CO'BIRONS. n. f. [cob and iron.] Irons with a knob at the upper end.

The implements of the kitchen; as spits, ranges, cobirons, and pots. Bacon.

COBISHOP. n. f. [cob and bishop.] A coadjutant bishop.

Valerius, advanced in years, and a Grecian by birth, not qualified to preach in the Latin tongue, made use of Austin as a cobishop, for the benefit of the church of Hippo. Ayliffe.

CO'BUT. n. f. [cob and nut.] A boy's game; the conquering nut.

CO'BWAN. n. f. [cob, head, and swan.] The head or leading swan.

I am not taken

With a cobswan, or a high-mountain bull,
As foolish Leda and Europa were. Ben Jonson.

CO'BWEB. n. f. [cobweb, Dutch.]

1. The web or net of a spider: from cob, a spider.

The luckless Clarion,
With violent swift flight, forth carried
Into the cursed cobweb, which his foe
Had framed for his final overthrow. Spenser.

Is supper ready, the house trimmed, rushes swept, and cobwebs swept? Shakspeare.

The spider, in the house of a burgher, fell presently to her net-work of drawing cobwebs up and down. L'Estrange.

2. Any snare, or trap: implying insidiousness and weakness.

For he a rope of sand could twist
As tough as learned Sorbonit;
And weave fine cobwebs fit for scull
That's empty when the moon is full. Hudibras.

Chronology at best is but a cobweb law, and he broke through it with his weight. Dryden.

Laws are like cobwebs, which may catch small flies, but let wasps and hornets break through. Swift.

COCCI'FEROUS. adj. [from coccus, and fero, Lat.] All plants or trees are so called that have berries. Quincy.

CO'CHINEAL. n. f. [cocinilla, Span. a woodlouse.] An insect gathered upon the opuntia, and dried: from which a beautiful red colour is extracted. Hill.

CO'CHLEARY. adj. [from cochlea, Lat. a screw.] Screwform; in the form of a screw.

That at St. Dennis, near Paris, hath wreathy spires, and cochleary turnings about it, which agreeth with the description of the unicorn's horn in Ælian. Boswell's Vulgar Errors.

CO'CHLEATED. adj. [from cochlea, Lat.] Of a screwed or turbinated form.

Two pieces of stone, struck forth of the cavity of the umbilici of shells, of the same sort with the foregoing: they are of a cochleated figure. Woodward on Fossils.

COCK. n. f. [cocc, Sax. coq, Fr.]

1. The male to the hen; a domestick fowl, remarkable for his gallantry, pride and courage.

Cocks have great combs and spurs; hens, little or none. Bacon's Natural History.

True cocks o' th' game,
That never ask for what, or whom, they fight;
But turn 'em out, and shew 'em but a foe,
Cry liberty, and that's a cause of quarrel. Dryd.

The careful hen
Calls all her chirping family around,
Fed and defended by the fearless cock. Thomson.

2. The male of any small bird.

Calves and philosophers, tygers and statesmen, cock sparrows and coquets, exactly resemble one another in the formation of the pineal gland. Arbuthnot and Pope.

3. The weathercock, that shows the direction of the wind by turning.

You cataracts and hurricanes, spout Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the cocks! Shakspeare.

4. A spout to let out water at will, by turning the stop: the handle had probably a cock on the top. Things that were contrived to turn, seem anciently to have had that form, whatever was the reason.

When every room
Hath blaze'd with lights, and bray'd with minstrelsy,

I have retir'd me to a wasteful cock,
And let mine eyes at flow. Shakspeare.

It were good these were a little cock made in the belly of the upper glass. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Thus the small jett, which hasty hands unlock,
Spirits in the gardner's eyes who turns the cock. Pope.

5. The notch of an arrow.

6. The part of the lock of a gun that strikes with the flint. [from cocca, Ital. the notch of an arrow. Skinner. Perhaps from the action, like that of a cock pecking; but it was, I think, so called when it had not its present form.]

With hasty rage he snatch'd
His gunshot, that in bullets watch'd;
And bending cock, he level'd full Against th' outside of Talsol's skull. Hudibras.

A seven-shot gun carries powder and bullets for seven charges and discharges. Under the breach of the barrel is one box for the powder;
a little before the lock another for the bullets;
behind the cock a charger, which carries the powder from the box to a funnel at the farther end of the lock. Greus.

7. A conqueror; a leader; a governing man.

Sir Andrew is the cock of the club since he left us. Addison.

My schoolmaster call'd me a dunce and a fool:
But at cuffs I was always the cock of the school. Swift.

8. Cockerowing; a note of the time in a morning.

We were carousing till the second cock. Shak.
He begins at cusew, and goes to the first cock. Shakspeare.

9. A cockboat; a small boat.

They take view of all sized cocks, barges, and fisherboats hovering on the coast. Carew.

The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice; and yond tall anchoring bark
Diminish'd to her cock; her cock, a buoy,
Almost too small for sight. Shakspeare.

10. A small heap of hay. [Properly cop.]

As soon as the dew is off the ground, spread the hay again, and turn it, that it may wither on the other side; then handle it, and if you find it dry, make it up into cocks. Martinet.

11. The form of a hat. [from the comb of the cock.]

You see many a smart rhetorician turning his hat in his hands, moulding it into several different cocks. Addison.

12. The style or gnomon of a dial. Chamb.

13. The needle of a balance.

14. Cock on the Hoop. Triumphant; exulting.

Now I am a frisker, all men on me look;
What should I do but set cock on the hoop?

You'll make a mutiny among my guests!
You will set cock a hoop! Camden's Remains.

For Hudibias, who I thought h' had won
The field as certain as a gun,
And having routed the whole troop,
With victory was cock a hoop. Hudibras.

To Cock. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To set erect; to hold bolt upright, as a cock holds his head.

This is that muscle which performs the motion so often mentioned by the Latin poets, when they talk of a man's cocking his nose, or playing the rhinoceros. Addison.

Our Lightfoot harks, and cocks his ears;
O'er yonder stile see Lubberkin appears. Gay.

Dick would cock his nose in scorn,
But Tom was kind and loving. Swift.

2. To set up the hat with an air of petulance and pertness.

Dick, who thus long had passive sat,
Here strook'd his chin and cock'd his hat. Prior.

An alert young fellow cocked his hat upon a friend of his who entered. Addison's Spectator.

3. To mould the form of the hat.

4. To fix the cock of a gun ready for a discharge.

Some of them holding up their pistols, cocked, near the door of the house, which they kept open. Dryden's Dedication, Æneid.

5. To raise hay in small heaps.

Sike mirth in May is meetest for to make,
Or summer shade, under the cocked hay. Spenser.

To Cock. v. n.

1. To strut; to hold up the head, and look big, or menacing, or pert.

Sir Fopling is a fool so nicely writ,
The ladies would mistake him for a wit;
And when he sings, talks loud, and cocks, would cry,

I vow, methinks, he's pretty company. Dryd.

Every one cocks and struts upon it, and pretends to overlook us. Addison's Guardian.

2. To train or use fighting cocks.

Cries out 'gainst cocking, since he cannot bet.

Ben Jonson.

Cock, in composition, signifies small or little.

COCKA'DE. n. f. [from cock.] A riband worn in the hat.

CO'KATRICE. n. f. [from cock, and atzen, Sax. a serpent.] A serpent supposed to rise from a cock's egg.

They will kill one another by the look, like cokatrices. Shakspeare.

This was the end of this little cokatrice; and a king, that was able to destroy those that did not espise him first.

This cokatrice is soonest crushed in the shell;
but, if it grows, it turns to a serpent and a dragon. Taylor.

My wife! 'tis she, the very cokatrice!

Congress.

CO'CKBOAT. n. f. [cock and boat.] A small boat belonging to a ship.

That invincible armada, which having not fired a cottage of ours at land, nor taken a cock-boat of ours at sea, wandered through the wilderness of the northern seas. Bacon.

Did they think it less dishonour to God to be like a brute, or a plant, or a cockboat, than to be like a man? Sellingfleet.

CO'CKBROTH. n. f. Broth made by boiling a cock.

Diet upon spoon-meats; as veal or cockbroth prepared with French barley. Harvey.

COCKCROWING. n. f. [cock and crow.]

The time at which cocks crow; early morning.

Ye know not when the master of the house cometh; at even, or at midnight, or at the cockcrowing, or in the morning. Mark.

To Co'CKER. v. a. [coquellier, French.]

To cade; to fondle; to indulge.

Most children's constitutions are spoiled by cocking and tenderness. Locke on Education.

He that will give his son sugar plums to make him learn, does but authorize his love of pleasure, and cocker up that propensity which he ought to subdue. Locke on Education.

Bred a fondling and an heiress,
Drest'd like any lady may 'ests,
Cocker'd by the servants round,
Was too good to touch the ground. Swift.

Co'CKER. n. f. [from cock.] One who follows the sport of cockfighting.

Co'CKEREL. n. f. [from cock.] A young cock.

Which of them first begins to crow?—
The old cock?—The cockerel. Shakespeare.
What wilt thou be, young cockerel, when thy spurs
Are grown to sharpness? Dryden.

Co'CKET. n. f. [of uncertain derivation.]

A seal belonging to the king's customhouse: likewise a scroll of parchment, sealed and delivered by the officers of the customhouse to merchants, as a warrant that their merchandise is entered. Cowell.

The greatest profit did arise by the cocket of hides; for wool and woollens were ever of little value in this kingdom. Davies.

Co'CKFIGHT. n. f. [cock and fight.] A battle or match of cocks.

In cockfights, to make one cock more hardy, and the other more cowardly. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

At the seasons of football and cockfighting, these little republics reassume their national hatred to each other. Addison.

Co'CKHORSE. adj. [cock and horse.] On horseback; triumphant; exulting.

Alma, they strenuously maintain,
Sits cockhorse on her throne the brain. Prior.

Co'CKLE. n. f. [coccol, Saxon; solium, xizania, Lat.] A weed that grows in corn, the same with cornrose; a species of poppy.

In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition. Shak.

Good seed degenerates, and oft obeys
The soil's disease, and into cockle strays. Donne.

Co'CKLE. n. f. [coquille, French.]

1. A small testaceous fish.

It is a cockle or a walnut shell. Shakespeare.

We may, I think, from the make of an oyster, or cockle, reasonably conclude, that it has not so many, nor so quick senses as a man. Locke.

Three common cockle shells out of gravel pits. Woodward.

2. A little or young cock. Obsolete.

They bearen the crag so stiff and so state,
As cockle on his dunghill crawing crank. Spenser.

To Co'CKLE. v. a. [from cockle.] To contract into wrinkles, like the shell of a cockle.

Show'rs soon drench the carnlet's cockled grain. Gay.

Co'CKLED. adj. [from cockle.] Shelled; or perhaps cockleate, turbinated.

Love's feeling is more soft and sensible
Than are the tender horns of cockled snails. Shakespeare.

Co'CKLOFT. n. f. [cock and loft.] The room over the garret, in which fowls are supposed to roost; unless it be rather corrupted from coploft, the cop or top of the house.

If the lowest floors already burn,
Cocklofts and garrets soon will take their turn. Dryden's Journal.

My garrets, or rather my cocklofts indeed, are very indifferently furnished; but they are rooms to lay lumber in. Swift.

Co'CKMASTER. n. f. [cock and master.] One that breeds game cocks.

A cockmaster bought a partridge, and turned it among the fighting cocks. L'Estrange.

Co'CKMATCH. n. f. [cock and match.] Cockfight for a prize.

At the same time that the heads of parties preserve towards one another an outward show of good breeding, their tools will not so much as mingle at a cockmatch. Addison.

Though quail-fighting is what is most taken notice of, they had doubtless cockmatches also. Arbuthnot and Pope.

Co'CKNEY. n. f. [A word of which the original is much controverted. The French use an expression, païs de cocaigne, for a country of dainties.

Paris est pour un riche un païs de cocaigne.
Boileau.

Of this word they are not able to settle the original. It appears, whatever was its first ground, to be very ancient, being mentioned in an old Normanno-Saxon poem:

Far in see by west Spayng,
Is a lond where cocayng.

On which Dr. Hicks has this remark:

Nunc coquin, coquinez: quæ olim apud Gallos, otio, gula, et ventri deditos, ignavum, ignavam, desidiosam, desidiosam, segnem, significant. Hinc urbanos, utpote à rusticis laboribus ad vitam sedentariam et desidiosam avocatos, pagani nostri olim cocaignes, quod nunc scribitur cockneys, vocabant. Et pœta hic noster in monachos & moniales, ut segne genus hominum qui, desidie dediti, ventri indulgebant, & coquinez amatores erant, malevolentissime invehitur; monasteria & monasticam vitam inde sermone terre cockaineæ parabolice perstringens.]

1. A native of London, by way of contempt.

So the cockney did to the eels, when she put them i' th' patty alive. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

For who is such a cockney in his breast,
Proud of the plenty of the southern part,
To scorn that union, by which we may Boast 'twas his countrymen that writ this play? De'f.

The cockney, travelling into the country, is surprized at many common practices of rural affairs. Watts.

2. Any effeminate, ignorant, low, mean, despicable citizen.

I am afraid this great lubber the world will prove a cockney. Shakespeare.

Co'CKPIT. n. f. [cock and pit.]

1. The area where cocks fight.

Can this cockpit hold
The vasty field of France? Shakespeare.

And now have I gained the cockpit of the western world, and academy of arms, for many years. Hosuei's Focal Foreg.

Co'CKSURE. adv. [from cock and sure.]

Confidently certain; without fear or diffidence. A word of contempt.

We steal, as in a castle, cocksure. Shakespeare.
I thought myself cocksure of his horse, which he readily promised me. Pope's Letter.

Co'CKSWAIN. n. f. [cocksyppine, Saxon.]

The officer who has the command of the cockboat. Corruptly COXON.

Co'CKWEED. n. f. [from cock and weed.]

A plant, called also dittander and peppercorn.

Co'COA. n. f. [cacatal, Span. and therefore more properly written cacao.]

A species of palm-tree, cultivated in the East and West Indies. The bark of the nut is made into cordage, and the shell into drinking-bowls. The kernel affords them a wholesome food, and the milk contained in the shell a cooling liquor. The leaves are used for thatching their houses, and are wrought into baskets. Minor.

The cocos or chocolate nut is a fruit of an oblong figure; is composed of a thin but hard and woody coat or skin, of a dark blackish colour; and of a dry kernel, filling up its whole cavity, fleshy, dry, firm, and smooth to the touch, of a dusky colour, an agreeable smell, and a pleasant and peculiar taste. It was unknown to us till the discovery of America. The tree is of the thickness of a man's leg, and but a few feet in height; its bark rough, and full of tubercles and its leaves six or eight inches long, half as much in breadth, and pointed at the ends. The flowers are succeeded by the fruit, which is large and oblong, resembling a cucumber, five, six, or eight inches in length, and three or four in thickness; when fully ripe, of a purple colour. Within the cavity of this fruit are lodged the cocos nuts, usually about thirty in number. Hill's Mat. Medic.

Amid those orchards of the sun,
Give me to drain the cocos' milky bowl,
And from the palm to draw its fleshening wine. Thoufa.

Co'CTILE. adj. [coctilis, Lat.] Made by baking, as a brick.

Co'CTION. n. f. [coctio, Lat.] The act of boiling.

Skinner.] To parboil; to soften by the heat of water.

Co'DLING. n. f. [from To codle.] An apple generally codled, to be mixed with milk.

In July come gilliflowers of all varieties, early pears and plums in fruit, gemmings and codlings.

Ruscon's Essays.

Their entertainment at the height,

In cream and codling, rev'ling with delight. King.

He let it lie all winter in a gravel walk, south of a codling hedge. Mortimer's Husbandry.

A codling, ere it went his lip in,

Would straight become a golden pippin. Swift.

CoEFFICACY. n. f. [con and efficacia, Lat.]

The power of several things acting together to produce an effect.

We cannot in general infer the efficacy of those stars, or cofficiency particular in medicines.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CoEFFICIENCY. n. f. [con and efficio,

Latin.] Co-operation; the state of acting together to some single end.

The managing and carrying on of this work,

by the spirits instrumental cofficiency, requires that they be kept together, without distinction or dissipation. Gianetti's Serpents.

CoEFFICIENT. n. f. [con and efficiens,

Latin.]

1. That which unites its action with the action of another.

2. In algebra.

Such numbers, or given quantities, that are put before letters, or unknown quantities, into which letters they are supposed to be multiplied, and so do make a rectangle or product with the letters; as, $4a$, $6bx$, $cxyz$; where 4 is the coefficient of $4a$, 6 of $6bx$, and c of $cxyz$. Chambers.

3. In fluxions.

The coefficient of any generating term is the quantity arising by the division of that term, by the generated quantity. Chambers.

CoE'LIACK Passion. [κοιλία, the belly.]

A diarrhoea, or flux, that arises from the indigestion or putrefaction of food in the stomach and bowels, whereby the aliment comes away little altered from what it was when eaten, or changed

like corrupted stinking flesh. Quincy.

CoE'NPTION. n. f. [coemptio, Lat.] The act of buying up the whole quantity of any thing.

Men policies and coemption of wares for resale, where they are not restrained, are great means to enrich. Brown's Essays.

CoE'QUAL. adj. [from con and equalis,

Lat.] Equal; being of the same rank or dignity with another.

Henry the Fifth did sometime prophesy,

If once he came to be a cardinal,

He'll make his cap coequal with the crown.

Shakespeare's Henry vi.

CoE'QUALITY. n. f. [from coequal.] The state of being equal.

To COE'RCER. v. a. [coerceo, Lat.] To restrain; to keep in order by force.

Punishments are manifold, that they may coerce

this profligate fort. Ayliffe's Paragon.

CoE'RCIBLE. adj. [from coerceo.]

1. That may be restrained.

2. That ought to be restrained.

CoE'RCION. n. f. [from coerceo.] Penal restraint; check.

The coercion or execution of the sentence in ecclesiastical courts, is only by excommunication of the person contumacious. Hale's Com. Law.

Government has coercion and animadversion upon such as neglect their duty; without which coercive power, all government is toothless and precipitous. South.

CoE'RCIVE. adj. [from coerceo.]

1. That has the power of laying restraint.

All things, on the surface spread, are bound

By their coercive vigour to the ground! Blackmore.

2. That has the authority of restraining by punishment.

For ministers to seek that themselves might have coercive power over the church, would have been hardly construed. Hooker, Preface.

The virtues of a general, or a king, are prudence, counsel, active fortitude, coercive power, awful command, and the exercise of magnanimity, as well as justice. Dryden.

CoE'SSENTIAL. adj. [con and essentia,

Latin.] Participating of the same essence.

The Lord our God is but one God, in which indivisible unity we adore the Father, as being altogether of himself; we glorify that consubstantial Word, which is the Son; we bless and magni-fy that coessential Spirit eternally proceeding from both, which is the Holy Ghost. Hooker.

CoE'SSENTIALITY. n. f. [from coessential.]

Participation of the same essence.

CoE'TA'NEOUS. adj. [con and etnas, Latin.]

Of the same age with another: with to.

Eye was old as Adam, and Cain their son coetaneous unto both. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Every fault hath penal effects, coetaneous to the ad. Government.

Through the body every member sustains another; and all are coetaneous, because none can sustain alone. Bentley's Sermons.

Son. Hooker.

CoE'TERNITY. n. f. [from coeternal.]

Existence from eternity equal with another eternal being.

The eternity of the Son's generation, and his coeternity and consubstantiality with the Father, when he came down from heaven, and was incaruate. Hammond's Fundamentals.

CoE'VAL. adj. [coevus, Latin.]

1. Of the same age.

Even his teeth and white, like a young flock,

Coeval, and new-thorn, from the clear brook

Recent. Prior.

2. Of the same age with another: followed by with.

This religion cannot pretend to be coeval with man. Hale.

The monthly revolutions of the moon, or the diurnal of the earth upon its own axis, by the very hypothesis, are coeval with the former.

Bentley.

Silence, coeval with eternity!

Thou wert, ere nature first began to be:

'Twas one vast nothing all, and all slept fast in thee! Pope.

3. Sometimes by to.

Although we had no monuments of religion ancienter than idolatry, we have no reason to conclude that idolatrous religion was coeval to mankind. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CoE'VAL. n. f. [from the adjective.] A contemporary; but properly one not only living at the same time, but of the same time of life.

As it were not enough to have outdone all your coevals in wit, you will excel them in good-nature. Pope.

CoE'VOUS. adj. [coevus, Lat.] Of the same age.

Then it should not have been the first, as supposing some other thing coevous to it. South.

To COE'XIST. v. n. [con and existo, Lat.]

1. To exist at the same time.

The three stars that coexist in heavenly constellations, are a multitude of stars. Hale.

Of substance no one has any clear idea, farther than of certain simple ideas coexisting together. Locke.

2. Followed by with.

It is sufficient that we have the idea of the length of any regular periodical appearances, which we can in our minds apply to duration, with which the motion or appearance never coexisted. Locke.

CoE'XISTENCE. n. f. [from coexist.]

1. Existence at the same time with another. Locke, who in the preceding lines has coexisted with, has here coexistence to.

The measuring of any duration, by some motion, depends not on the real coexistence of that thing to that motion, or any other periods of revolution. Locke.

2. More commonly followed by with.

We can demonstrate the being of God's eternal ideas, and their coexistence with him. Grav.

CoE'XISTENT. adj. [from coexist.]

1. Having existence at the same time with another: with to.

To the measuring the duration of any thing

by time, it is not requisite that that thing should be coexistent to the motion we measure by, or any other periodical revolution. Locke.

2. Sometimes with.

This proves no antecedent necessity, but co- existent with the act. Bramhall.

Time is taken for so much of duration as is coexistent with the motions of the great bodies of the universe. Locke.

All that one point is either future or past, and no parts are coexistent or contemporary with it.

Bentley.

To COE'XTEND. v. a. [con and extendo,

Latin.] To extend to the same space or duration with another.

Every motion is, in some sort, coextended with the body moved. Grav's Cosmologia.

CoE'XTENSION. n. f. [from coextend.]

The act or state of extending to the same space or duration with another.

Though it be a spirit, I find it is no inconvenience to have some analogy, at least coexten-

sion, with my body. Hale.

COFFEE. n. f. [It is originally Arabick, pronounced caben by the Turks, and cabuah by the Arabs.] The tree is a species of Arabick jamine.

It is found to succeed as well in the Caribbee islands as in its native place of growth: but whether the coffee produced in the West Indies will prove as good as that from Mocha in Arabia Felix, time will discover. Miller.

Coffee denotes a drink prepared from the berries, very familiar in Europe for these eighty years, and among the Turks for one hundred and fifty. Thence, the traveller, was the first who brought it into France; and a Greek servant, called Pasqua, brought into England by Mr. Daniel Edwards, a Turkey merchant, in 1652, to make his coffee, first set up the profession of coffee-man, and introduced the drink among us. Chambers.

They have in Turkey a drink called coffee, made of a berry of the same name, as black as soot, and of a strong scent, but not aromatic; which they take, beaten into powder, in water, as hot as they can drink it. This drink comforteth the brain and heart, and helpeth digestion. Bacon.

To part her time 'twixt reading and bores, Or o'er cold coffee trifle with the spoon. Pope.

COFFEEHOUSE. n. f. [coffee and house.] A house of entertainment where coffee is sold, and the guests are supplied with newspapers.

At ten, from coffeehouse or play Returning, finishes the day. Prior.

It is a point they do not concern themselves about, farther than perhaps as a subject in a coffeehouse. Swift.

COFFEE-MAN. n. f. [coffee and man.] One that keeps a coffeehouse.

Consider your enemies the Lacedaemonians; did ever you hear that they preferred a coffee-man to Agamemnon? Addison.

TO COHEIRE. v. n. [cobareo, Latin.]

1. To stick together; to hold fast one to another, as parts of the same mass.

Two pieces of marble, having their surface exactly plain, polite, and applied to each other in such a manner as to intercept the air, do cohere firmly together as one. Westward.

We find that the force, whereby bodies cohere, is very much greater when they come to immediate contact, than when they are at ever so small a finite distance. Cheyne's Phys. Prin.

None want a place; for all, their centre found, Hung to the goddess, and coher'd around; Not choler, orb in orb conglob'd, are seen The buzzing bees about their dusky queen. Pope.

2. To be well connected; to follow regularly in the order of discourse.

3. To suit; to fit; to be fitted to.

Had time coher'd with place, or place with wishing, Shakspeare.

4. To agree.

COHERENCE. n. f. [cobarentia, Latin.]

COHERENCY. n. f. [cobarentia, Latin.]

1. That state of bodies in which their parts are joined together, from what cause soever it proceeds, so that they resist divulsion and separation; nor can be separated by the same force by which they might be simply moved; or, being only laid upon one another, might be parted again. Quincy.

The pressure of the air will not explain, nor can be a cause of the coherence of the particles of air themselves. Locke.

Matter is either fluid or solid; words that may comprehend the middle degrees between extreme fixtitude and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion. Bentley.

2. Connection; dependency; the relation of parts or things one to another.

It shall be no trouble to find each controversy's resting-place, and the coherence it hath with things, either on which it dependeth, or which depend on it. Hooker, Preface.

Why between sermons and faith should there be ordinarily that coherence, which causes have with their usual effects? Hooker.

3. The texture of a discourse, by which one part follows another regularly and naturally.

4. Consistency in reasoning, or relating, so that one part of the discourse does not destroy or contradict the rest.

Coherence of discourse, and a direct tendency of all the parts of it to the argument in hand, are most eminently to be found in him. Locke.

COHERENT. adj. [cobarens, Latin.]

1. Sticking together, so as to resist separation.

By coagulating and diluting, that is, making their parts more or less coherent. Arbuthnot.

Where all must full, or not coherent, be; And all that rises, rises in due degree. Boyle.

2. Connected; united.

The mind proceeds from the knowledge it stands possessed of already, to that which lies next, and is coherent to it, and so on to what it aims at. Locke.

3. Suitable to something else; regularly adapted.

Instruct my daughter, That time and place, with this deceit so lawful, May prove coherent. Shakspeare.

4. Consistent; not contradictory to itself.

A coherent thinker, and a strict reasoner, is not to be made at once by a set of rules. Watts.

COHESION. n. f. [from cobere.]

1. The act of sticking together.

Hard particles heaped together touch in a few points, and must be separable by less force than breaks a solid particle, whose parts touch in all the space between them, without any pores or interstices to weaken their cohesion. Newton.

Solids and fluids differ in the degree of cohesion, which, being increased, turns a fluid into a solid. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The state of union or inseparability.

What cause of their cohesion can you find? What props support, what chains the fabrick bind? Blackmore.

3. Connection; dependence.

In their tender years, ideas that have no natural cohesion come to be united in their heads. Locke.

COHESIVE. adj. [from cobere.] That has the power of sticking to another, and of resisting separation.

COHESIVENESS. n. f. [from cobesive.]

The quality of being cohesive; the quality of resisting separation.

COLD. adj. [colb, Saxon; kalt, Germ.]

1. Not hot; not warm; gelid; wanting warmth; being without heat.

The diet in the state of manhood ought to be solid; and their chief drink water cold, because in such a state it has its own natural spirit. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

The aggregated soil

Death, with his mace petrified, cold, and dry,
As with a trident, smote. Milton.

2. Causing sense of cold.

Bids us seek

Some better shroud, some better warmth, to cherish

Our limbs benumb'd, ere this diurnal star
Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams Reflected, may with matter fere foment. Milton.

3. Chill; shivering; having sense of cold.

O noble English, that could entertain,
With half their forces, the full power of France;
And let another half stand laughing by,
All out of work, and cold for action. Shakespeare.

4. Having cold qualities; not volatile; not acid.

Cold plants have a quicker perception of the heat of the sun than the hot herbs; as a cold hand will sooner find a little warmth than an hot. Bacon's Natural History.

5. Indifferent; frigid; wanting passion; wanting zeal; without concern; unactive; unconcerned; wanting an'our.

There sprung up one kind of men, with whose zeal and forwardness the rest being compared, were thought to be marvellous cold and dull. Hooker's Preface.

Infinite shall be made cold in religion, by your example, that never were hurt by reading books. Ascham.

Temp'rately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress.—Sir, these cold ways,
That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous. Shakespeare.

New dated letters these,

Their cold intent, tenour, and substance thus;
Here doth he with his person, and his power,
The which he could not levy. Shakespeare.

We should not, when the blood was cold, have threatened our prisoners with the sword. Shaksf.

To see a world in flames, and an host of angels in the clouds, one must be much of a stoick to be a cold and unconcerned spectator.

Burnet's Preface to the Theory of the Earth.

No drums or trumpet needs

T' inspire the coward, or to warm the cold;
His voice, his sole appearance, makes them bold. Dryden.

O, thou hast touch'd me with thy sacred theme,
And my cold heart is kindled at thy flame. Rowe.

A man must be of a very cold or degenerate temper, whose heart doth not burn within him in the midst of praise and adoration. Addison.

6. Unaffected; unable to move the passions.

What a deal of cold business doth a man mispend the better part of life in? In scattering compliments, tendering visits, following feasts and plays. Hen. Jonson.

The rabble are pleased at the first entry of a disguise; but the jest grows cold even with them too, when it comes on in a second scene. Addison on Italy.

7. Reserved; coy; not affectionate; not cordial; not friendly.

Let his knights have colder looks

Among you. Shakespeare's King Lear.

The commissioners grew more reserved, and colder towards each other. Clarendon.

8. Chaste; not heated by vitious appetite.

Vol. I.

You may

Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And yet seem cold, the time you may so hoodwink:
We've willing dames enough. Shakespeare.

9. Not welcome; not received with kindness or warmth of affection.

My master's suit will be but cold,
Since she respects my mistress's love. Shakespeare.

10. Not hasty; not violent.

11. Not affecting the scent strongly.

She made it good

At the hedge corner, in the coldest fault. Shaksf.

12. Not having the scent strongly affected.

Smell this business with a sense as cold

As is a dead man's nose. Shakespeare.

COLD. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. The cause of the sensation of cold; the privation of heat; the frigorific power.

Fair lined clippers for the cold. Shaksf.

Heat and cold are nature's two hands, whereby she chiefly worketh: and heat we have in readiness, in respect of the fire; but for cold, we must stay till it cometh, or seek it in deep caves, or high mountains: and, when all is done, we cannot attain it in any great degree. Bacon.

The sun

Had first his precept so to move, so shine,
As might affect the earth with cold and heat Scarce tolerable, and from the north to call Decrepid winter, from the south to bring Solstitial summer's heat. Milton.

2. The sensation of cold; coldness; chillness.

When she saw her lord prepar'd to part,
A deadly cold ran thiv'ring to her heart. Dryd.

3. A disease caused by cold; the obstruction of perspiration.

What disease hath thou?—

A whoreson cold, sir; a cough. Shakespeare.

Let no ungentle cold destroy

All rattle we have of heavenly joy. Rowson.

Those rains, so covering the earth, might providentially contribute to the disruption of it, by stopping all the pores and all evaporation, which would make the vapours within struggle violently, as we get a fever by a cold. Burnet.

COLDLY. adv. [from cold.]

1. Without heat.

2. Without concern; indifferently; negligently; without warmth of temper or expression.

What England says, say briefly, gentle lord;
We coldly pause for thee. Shakespeare.

Swift seem'd to wonder what he meant,
Not would believe my lord had sent;
So never offer'd once to stir,
But coldly said, Your servant, sir. Swift.

COLDNESS. n. f. [from cold.]

1. Want of heat; power of causing the sensation of cold.

He relates the excessive coldness of the water they met with in summer in that icy region, where they were forced to winter. Boyle's Exp.

Such was the discord, which did first disorder Form, order, beauty, through the universe;
While dryness moisture, coldness heat revisits,
All that we have, and that we are, subsists. Deak.

2. Unconcern; frigidity of temper; want of zeal; negligence; disregard.

Divisions of religion are not only the farthest spread, because in religion all men presume themselves interested; but they are also, for the most part, hotter prosecuted: forasmuch as coldness, which, in other contentions, may be thought to proceed from moderation, is not in these so favourably confirmed. Hooker.

If, upon reading admired passages in authors, he finds a coldness and indifference in his thoughts, he ought to conclude, that he himself wants the faculty of discovering them. Addison.

It betrayed itself in a sort of indifference and carelessness in all her actions, and coldness to her best friends. Arbuthnot.

3. Coyness; want of kindness; want of passion.

Unhappy youth! how will thy coldness raise Tempests and storms in his afflicted bosom! Addison's Cato.

Let ev'ry tongue its various censures chuse;
Attolve with coldness, or with spite accuse. Prior.

4. Chastity; exemption from vehement desire.

The silver stream her virgin coldness keeps,
For ever murmurs, and for ever weeps. Pope.

COLE. n. f. [capl, Saxon.] A general name for all sorts of cabbage.

COLESEED. n. f. [from cole and seed.]

Cabbage seed.

Where land is rank, it is not good to sow wheat after a fallow; but coleseed or barley, and then wheat. Martineau.

COLEWORT. n. f. [caplwort, Sax.] A species of cabbage.

The decoction of coleworts is also commended to bathe them. Wijeman of an Erysipelas.

She took the coleworts, which her husband got
From his own ground (a small well-water'd spot),
She tripp'd the stalks of all their leaves; the best
She cull'd, and then with handy care she dress'd it. Dryden.

How turnips hide their swelling heads below;
And how the closing coleworts upwards grow. Gay.

COLICK. n. f. [colicus, Latin.]

It strictly is a disorder of the colon; but loosely, any disorder of the stomach or bowels that is attended with pain. There are four sorts: 1. A bilious colick, which proceeds from an abundance of acrimony or choler irritating the bowels, so as to occasion continual gripes, and generally with a looseness; and this is best managed with lenitives and emollients. 2. A flatulent colick, which is pain in the bowels from flatulencies and wind, which distend them into unequal and unnatural capacities; and this is managed with carminatives and moderate openers. 3. An hysterical colick, which arises from disorders of the womb, and is communicated by consent of parts to the bowels; and is to be treated with the ordinary hystricks. 4. A nervous colick, which is from convulsive spasms and contortions of the guts themselves, from some disorders of the spirits, or nervous fluid, in their component fibres; whereby their capacities are in many places streightened, and sometimes so as to occasion obstinate obstructions: this is best remedied by brisk catharticks, joined with opiates and emollient diluters. There is also a species of this distemper which is commonly called the stone colick, by consent of parts, from the irritation of the stone or gravel in the bladder or kidneys; and this is most commonly to be treated by nephriticks and oily diureticks, and is greatly assisted with the carminative turpentine clysters. Quincy.

Colicks of infants proceed from acidity, and the air in the aliment expanding itself, while the aliment ferments. Arbuthnot.

COLICK. adj. Affecting the bowels.

Intestine stone and ulcer, colick pangs. Merr.

TO COLLA'PSE. v. n. [collabor, collapsus, Latin.] To fall together; to close so as that one side touches the other.

In consumptions and atrophy the liquids are exhausted, and the sides of the canals collapse; therefore the attrition is increased, and consequently the heat. Arbuthnot on Diet.

COLLAPSION. n. f. [from collapse.]

1. The act of closing or collapsing.

2. The state of vessels closed.

COLLAR. n. f. [collare, Latin.]

1. A ring of metal put round the neck.

That's nothing, says the dog, but the fretting of my collar: nay, says the wolf, if there be a collar

In the case, I know better things than to sell my liberty. L'Estrange.

Ten brace and more of greyhounds;
With golden muzzles all their mouths were bound,
And collars of the same their neck surround. Dryd.

2. The part of the harness that is fastened about the horse's neck.

Her waggon spokes made of long spinners legs,
The traces of the smallest spider's web,
The collars of the moonshine's wat'ry beams. Shakspeare.

3. The part of the dress that surrounds the neck.

4. To slip the COLLAR. To get free; to escape; to disentangle himself from any engagement or difficulty.

When, as the ape him heard so much to talk
Of labour, that did from his liking baulk,
He would have slipped the collar handsomely. Hubbard's Tale.

5. A COLLAR of Brawn, is the quantity bound up in one parcel.

COLLAR-BONE. n. f. [from collar and bone.]
The clavicle; the bones on each side of the neck.

A page riding behind the coach fell down, bruised his face, and broke his right collar-bone. Wifeman's Surgery.

To COLLAR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To seize by the collar; to take by the throat.

2. To COLLAR beef, or other meat; to roll it up, and bind it hard and close with a string or collar.

To COLLA'TE. v. a. [confero, collatum, Latin.]

1. To compare one thing of the same kind with another.

Knowledge will be ever a wandering and indigested thing, if it be but a commixture of a few notions that are at hand and occur, and not excited from a sufficient number of instances, and those well collated. Bacon's Natural History.

They could not relinquish their Judaism, and embrace christianity, without considering, weighing, and collating both religions. South.

2. To collate books; to examine if nothing be wanting.

3. To bestow; to confer.

The significance of the sacrament disposes the spirit of the receiver to admit the grace of the spirit of God, these conformed, exhibited, and collated. Taylor's Communion.

4. With to. To place in an ecclesiastical benefice.

He thrust out the invader, and collated Amford to the benefice: Luther performed the consecration. Atterbury.

If a patron shall neglect to present unto a benefice, void above six months, the bishop may collate thereunto. Ayliffe.

COLLA'TERAL. adj. [con and latus, Lat.]

1. Side to side.

In his bright radiance and collateral light
Must I be comforted, not in his sphere. Shakf.
Thus saying, from his radiant seat he rose
Of high collateral glory. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Running parallel.

3. Diffused on either side.

But man by number is to manifest
His single imperfection; and begot
Lake of his like, his image multiply'd
In unity defective, which requires Collateral love and dearest amity. Milton.

4. In genealogy, those that stand in equal relation to some common ancestor.

The estate and inheritance of a person dying intestate, is, by right of devolution, according to the civil law, given to such as are allied to him ex latere, commonly styled collaterals, if there be no ascendants or descendants surviving at the time of his death. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. Not direct; not immediate.

They shall hear and judge 'twixt you and me;
If by direct or by collateral hand
They find us touch'd, we will our kingdom give
To you in satisfaction. Shakspeare.

6. Concurrent.

All the force of the motive lies within itself:
it receives no collateral strength from external considerations. Atterbury.

COLLA'TERALLY. adv. [from collateral.]

1. Side by side.

buried in the earth.
Hill on Fossils.

CO'LOM. n. f. [κόλος, a member.]

1. A point [:] used to mark a pause greater than that of a comma, and less than that of a period. Its use is not very exactly fixed; nor is it very necessary, being confounded by most with the semicolon. It was used before punctuation was refined, to mark almost any sense less than a period. To apply it properly, we should place it, perhaps, only where the sense is continued without dependence of grammar or construction: as, I love him, I despise him: I have long ceased to trust, but shall never forget to succour him.

2. The greatest and widest of all the intestines, about eight or nine hands breadth long.

The colon begins where the ilium ends, in the cavity of the os ilium on the right side; from thence ascending by the kidney on the same side, it passes under the concave side of the liver, to which it is sometimes tied, as likewise to the gall-bladder, which tinges it yellow in that place: then it runs under the bottom of the stomach to the spleen in the left side, to which it is also knit: from thence it turns down to the left kidney; and thence passing, in form of an S, it terminates at the upper part of the os sacrum in the rectum.
Quincy.

Now, by your cruelty hard bound,
I strain my guts, my colon wound.
Swift.

The contents of the colon are of a sour, fetid, acid smell in rabbits.
Floyer on the Humors.

CO'LODEL. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]

Skinner imagines it originally colonialis, the leader of a colony. Minshew deduces it from colonna, a pillar:
as, patria columna; exercitus columna.
Each is plausible.] The chief commander of a regiment; a field officer of the highest rank, next to the general officers.

It is now generally founded with only two distinct syllables, col'nel.

The chiefest help must be the care of the colonel, that hath the government of all his garrison.
Spenser on Ireland.

Captain or colonel, or knight in arms,
Whose chance on these sciences doors may seize;

If deed of honour did thee ever please,
Guard them, and him within protect from harmes.
Milton.

CO'LONELSHIP. n. f. [from colonel.]

The office or character of colonel.

While he continued a subaltern, he complained against the pride of colonels towards their officers; yet, in a few minutes after he had received his commission for a regiment, he confessed that colonelship was coming full upon him.
Swift.

TO CO'LOLIZE. v. a. [from colony.]

To plant with inhabitants; to settle with new planters; to plant with colonies.

There was never an hand drawn, that did double the rest of the habitable world, before this; for so a man may truly term it, if he shall put to account as well that that is, as that which may be hereafter, by the farther occupation and colonizing of those countries: and yet it cannot be affirmed, if one speak ingenuously, that it was the propagation of the christian faith that was the adamant of that discovery, entry, and plantation; but gold and silver, and temporal profit and glory; so that what was first in God's providence, was but second in man's appetite and intention.
Bacon's Holy War.

Druna hath advantage by acquit of islands,
which the colonizeth and furnisheth daily.
Hovel.

COLONNA'DE. n. f. [from colonna, Ital.]

a column.]

1. A penitile of a circular figure; or a series of columns disposed in a circle,

COLOUR. n. f. [color, Lat.]

1. The appearance of bodies to the eye only; hue; die.

It is a vulgar idea of the colours of solid bodies, when we perceive them to be a red, or blue, or green tincture of the surface; but a philosophical idea, when we consider the various colours to be different sensations, excited in us by the refracted rays of light, reflected on our eyes in a different manner, according to the different size, or shape, or situation of the particles of which surfaces are composed. Watts.

Her hair shall be of what colour it please God. Shakespeare.

For though our eyes can nought but colours see, Yet colours give them not their pow'r of sight. Davies.

The lights of colours are more refrangible one than another in this order; red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, deep violet. Newton.

2. The freshness, or appearance of blood, in the face.

My cheeks no longer did their colour boast. Dryden.

A sudden horror seiz'd his giddy head, And his ears trickled, and his colour fled. Dryden.

3. The tint of the painter.

When each bold figure just begins to live, The treach'rous colours the fair art betray, And all the bright creation fades away. Pope.

4. The representation of any thing superficially examined.

Their wisdom is only of this world, to put false colours upon things, to call good evil, and evil good, against the conviction of their own consciences. Swift.

5. Concealment; palliation; excuse; superficial cover.

It is no matter if I do halt; I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Their sin admitted no colour or excuse. King Charles.

6. Appearance; pretence; false show.

Under the colour of commending him, I have access my own love to prefer. Shakespeare.

power, under the disguises of holy combinations. King Charles.

3. Union of bodies, or qualities; com-mixture; conjunction.

These natures, from the moment of their first combination, have been and are for ever inseparable. Hucker.

Resolution of compound bodies by fire, does not to much enrich mankind as it divides the bodies; as upon the score of its making new compounds by new combinations. Boyle.

Ingratitude is always in combination with pride and hard-heartedness. South.

4. Copulation of ideas in the mind.

They never suffer any ideas to be joined in their understandings, in any other or stronger combination than what their own nature and correspondence give them. Locke.

5. COMBINATION is used, in mathematics, to denote the variation or alteration of any number of quantities, letters, sounds, or the like, in all the different manners possible. Thus the number of possible changes or combinations of the twenty-four letters of the alphabet, taken first two by two, then three by three, &c. amount to 1,391,724,288, 887,252,999,425,128,493,402,200.

House and heart are open for a friend; the p stage is easy, and not only admits, but even invites, the comer. South.

COMET. n. f. [cometa, Lat. a hairy star.]

A heavenly body in the planetary region, appearing suddenly, and again disappearing; and, during the time of its appearance, moving through its proper orbit like a planet. The orbits of comets are ellipses, having one of their foci in the centre of the sun; and being very long and eccentric, they become invisible when in that part most remote from the sun. Comets, popularly called blazing stars, are distinguished from other stars by a long train or tail of light, always opposite to the sun; hence arises a popular division of comets into three kinds, bearded, tailed, and haired comets; though the division rather relates to the different circumstances of the same comet, than to the phenomena of the several. Thus, when the comet is eastward of the sun, and moves from it, the comet is said to be bearded, barbatus, because the light marches before it. When the light is westward of the sun, the comet is said to be tailed, because the train follows it. When the comet and the sun are diametrically opposite, the earth being between them, the train is hid behind the body of the comet, excepting a little that appears around it, in form of a border of hair, hence called crinitus.

According to Sir Isaac Newton, the tail of a comet is a very thin vapour, emitted by the head or nucleus of the comet, ignited by the neighbourhood to the sun; and this vapour is furnished by the atmosphere of the comet. The vapours of comets being thus dilated, rarefied, and diffused, may probably, by means of their own gravity, be attracted down to the planets, and become intermingled with their atmospheres. For the conservation of the water and moisture of the planets, comets seem absolutely requisite; from whose condensed vapours and exhalations all that moisture which is spent in vegetations and putrefactions, and turned into dry earth, may be resupplied and recruited; for all vegetables increase wholly from fluids, and turn, by putrefaction, into earth. Hence the quantity of dry earth must continually increase, and the moisture of the globe decrease, and at last be quite evaporated, if it have not a continual supply. And I suspect, adds Sir Isaac, that the spirit which makes the finest, subtlest, and best part of our air, and which is absolutely requisite for the life and being of all things, comes principally from the comets.

The same great author has computed that the Sun's heat, in the comet of 1680, was, to his heat with us at midsummer, as twenty-eight thousand to one; and that the heat of the body of the comet was near two thousand times as great as that of red-hot iron. He also calculates, that a globe of red-hot iron, of the dimensions of our earth, would scarce be cool in fifty thousand years. If then the comet be supposed to cool a hundred times as fast as red-hot iron, yet, since its heat was two thousand times greater, supposing it of the bigness of the earth, it would not be cool in a million of years.

Tierney. Chambers.

And wherefore gaze this goodly company,
As if they saw some wondrous monument,
Some comet, or unusual prodigy?
Such his fell glances as the fatal light
Of staring comets.

Craheav.

I considered a comet, or, in the language of the vulgar, a blazing star, as a sky-rocket discharged by an hand that is almighty. Addison.
Fierce meteors shoot their arbitrary light,
And comets march with lawless horrors bright.

Prior.

COMETARY. } adj. [from comet.] Relating to a comet.

Refractions of light are in the planetary and cometary regions, as on our globe. Chymer.

Most glorious. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Simile; similitude; illustration by comparison.

True twins in love shall, in the world to come,
Approve their truths by Truillas; when their rhimes,
Full of protest, and oath, and big compare,
Want similies. Shakespeare's Truillas and Gressida.

COMPARISON. n. f. [comparaison, Fr.]

1. The act of comparing.

Natalis Comes, comparing his parts with those of a man, reckons his claws among them, which are much more like those of a lion: so easy it is to drive on the comparison too far to make it good.
Grew's Museum.

Our author saves me the comparison with tragedy; for he says, that herein he is to imitate the tragick poet.
Dryden.

2. The state of being compared.

If we will rightly estimate what we call good and evil, we shall find it lies much in comparison.
Locke.

Objects near our view are apt to be thought greater than those of a larger size that are more remote; and so it is with pleasure and pain: the present is apt to carry it, and those at a distance have the disadvantage in the comparison.
Locke.

3. A comparative estimate; proportion.

If men would live as religion requires, the world would be a most lovely and desirable place, in comparison of what now it is. Tillotson.
One can scarce imagine how so plentiful a soil should become so miserably unpeopled, in comparison of what it once was. Addison.

nunciation, motion, useth all these faculties at once. Ben Jonson's Discourse.

8. Compact; agreement; terms on which differences are settled.

To take away all such mutual grievances, injuries, and wrongs, there was no way but only by going upon composition and agreement amongst themselves. And again, all publick regiment, of what kind soever, seemeth evidently to have arisen from deliberate advice, consultation, and composition between men, judging it convenient and becomful. Hooker.

Thus we are agreed;
I crave our composition may be written
And seal'd between us. Shakespeare.

Their courage droops, and, hopelefs now,

Whatever past actions it cannot reconcile, or appropriate to that present self by consciousness, it can be no more concerned in than if they had never been done. Locke.

They think themselves out of the reach of providence, and no longer concerned to solicit his favour. Rogers.

4. To disturb; to make uneasy.

In one compressing engine I shut a sparrow, without forcing any air in; and in an hour the bird began to pant, and be concerned, and in less than an hour and a half to be sick. Darwin.

5. To concern himself. To intermeddle; to be busy.

Being a layman, I ought not to have concerned myself with speculations which belong to the profession. Dryden.

CONCERN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Business; affair: considered as relating to some one.

Let early care thy main concern secure, Things of less moment may delays endure. Denham.

This manner of exposing the private concerns of families, and sacrificing the secrets of the dead to the curiosity of the living, is one of those licentious practices, which might well deserve the animadversion of our government. Addison.

A leathen emperor said, if the gods were offended, it was their own concern, and they were able to vindicate themselves. Swift.

Religion is no trifling concern, to be performed in any careless and superficial manner. Rogers.

2. Interest; engagement.

No plots th' alien to his retirements give; 'Tis all mankind's concern that he should live. Dryden.

When we speak of the conflagration of the world, these have no concern in the question. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. Importance; moment.

Mysterious secrets of a high concern,
And weighty truths, solid convincing sense,
Expansive unaffected eloquence. Reynolds.
The mind is stunned and dazzled amidst that variety of objects; the cannot apply herself to those things which are of the utmost concern to her. Addison's Spectator

4. Passion; affection; regard.

Any, what concerns did both your souls divide?
Your honour gave us what your love denied. Dryden.

O Marcia, let me hope thy kind concern,
And gentle wishes, follow me to battle. Addison.
Why art this concern for the poor? We want them not, as the country is now managed;
where the plough has no work, one family can do the business of fifty. Swift.

CONCERNEDLY. adv. [from concern.]
With affection; with interest.

They had more positively and concernedly wedded his cause than they were before understood to have done. Clarendon.

CONCERNING. prep. [from concern: this word, originally a participle, has before a noun the force of a preposition.] Relating to; with relation to.

There is not any thing more subject to error, than the true judgment concerning the power and forces of an estate. Bacon.

The ancients had no higher recourse than to nature, as may appear by a discourse concerning this point in Strabo. Brown.

None can demonstrate that there is such an island as Jamaica; yet, upon testimony, I am free from all doubt concerning it. Tillotson.

CONCERNMENT. n. f. [from concern.]

1. The thing in which we are concerned or interested; affair; business; interest.

To mix with thy concerns I definit
Henceforth, nor too much disapprove my own. Milton.

This shows how useful you have been,
To bring the king's concerns in. Hudibras.
Yet when we're sick, the doctor's fetcht in haste,

Leaving our great concernment to the last. Denham.

When my concernment takes up no more room or compass than myself, then, so long as I know where to breathe and to exist, I know also where to be happy. South.

He that is wise in the affairs and concernments of other men, but careless and negligent of his own, that man may be said to be busy, but he is not wise. Tillotson.

Our spiritual interests, and the great concern-ments of a future state, would doubtless recur often. Astellbury.

Propositions which extend only to the present life, are finally compared with those that have influence upon our everlasting concernments. Watts on the Mind.

2. Relation; influence.

Sir, 'tis of near concernment, and imports
No less than the king's life and honour. Denham.
He justly fears a peace with me would prove
Of ill concernment to his haughty love. Dryden.

3. Intercourse; business.

The great concernment of men is with men, one amongst another. Locke.

4. Importance; moment.

I look upon experimental truths as matters of great concernment to mankind. Boyle.

5. Interposition; regard; meddling.

He married a daughter to the earl, without any other approbation of her father, or concern-ment in it, than suffering him and her to come into his presence. Clarendon.

6. Passion; emotion of mind.

While they are so eager to destroy the fame of others, their ambition is manifest in their con-cernment. Dryden.

If it carry with it the notion of something extraordinary, if apprehension and concernment accompany it, the idea is likely to sink the deeper. Locke.

1. The act of granting or yielding.
The concession of these charters was in a parliamentary way. Hale.

2. A grant; the thing yielded.

I still counted myself undiminished by my largest concessions, if by them I might gain the love of my people. King Charles.

When a lover becomes satisfied by small compliances, without further pursuits, then expect to find popular assemblies content with small concessions. Swift.

CONCESSIONARY. adj. [from concession.]
Given by indulgence or allowance.

CONCESSIONELY. adv. [from concession.]
By way of concession: as, yielding;
not controverting by assumption.

Some have written rhetorically and concessionely;
not controverting, but assuming the question, which, taken as granted, advantaged the illusion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CONCH. n. f. [concha, Lat.] A shell; a seashell.

He furnishes her closet first, and fills
The crowded shelves with rarities of shells:
Adds orient pearls, which from the conchs he old opinion the loyalist had formerly misled into them by their concionatory invectives. Hawes.

CONCISE. adj. [concisus, cut, Latin]

Brief; short; broken into short periods.

The concise style, which expresseth not enough, but leaves somewhat to be understood. B. Jonson.
Where the author is obscure, enlighten him;
where he is too brief and concise, amplify a little,
and let his notions go a larger view. Watts.

CONCISELY. adv. [from concise.] Briefly; shortly; in few words; in short sentences.

Olysses here speaks very concisely, and he may seem to break abruptly into the subject. Brown.

CONCISENESS. n. f. [from concise.] Brevity; shortness.

Giving more scope to Mercurius and Lanfau, that version, which has more of the majesty of Virgil, has less of his conciseness. Dryden.

CONCISION. n. f. [conscium, Lat.] Cutting off; excision; destruction.

CONCITATION. n. f. [concitatio, Latin.]
The act of stirring up, or putting in motion.

The very person of Christ, therefore, for ever and the self-same, was only, touching bodily substance, concluded within the grave. Hawes.

2. To include; to comprehend.

God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all. Roman.

3. To collect by ratiocination.

The providences of God are promiscuously administered in this world; so that no man can conclude God's love or hatred to any person, by any thing that befalls him. Tillotson.

4. To decide; to determine: that is, to shut or close the dispute.

Youth, ere it sees the world, here studies rest;
And age, returning thence, concludes it best. Dryden.

But no frail man, however great or high,
Can be concluded bliss before he die. Addison.

5. To end; to finish.

Is it concluded he shall be protector?
It is determin'd, not concluded yet;
But so it must be, if the king miscarry. Shaks.
I will conclude this part with the speech of a counsellor of state. Bacon.

These are my theme, and how the war began,
And how concluded by the godlike man. Dryden.

6. To oblige, as by the final determination.

The king would never endure that the baile multitude should frustrate the authority of the parliament, wherein their votes and contents were concluded. Bacon's Henry viii.

If therefore they will appeal to revelation for their creation, they must be concluded by it.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.
He never refused to be concluded by the authority of one legally summoned. Atterbury.

TO CONCLUDE. v. n.

1. To perform the last act of ratiocination; to collect the consequence; to determine.

For why should we the busy soul believe,
When boldly she concludes of that and this;
When of herself she can no judgment give,
Nor how, nor whence, nor where, nor what she is? Darwin.

The blind man's relations import no necessity of concluding, that though black was the roughest of colours, therefore white should be the smoothest. Boyle.

There is something infamous in the very attempt: the world will conclude I had a guilty conscience. Debutans.

2. To settle opinion.

Can we conclude upon Luther's instability as our author has done, because, in a single notion no way fundamental, an enemy writes that he had some doubts? Atterbury.

I question not but your translation will do honour to our country; for I conclude of it already from those performances. Addison to Pope.

3. To determine finally.

They humbly sue unto your excellence,
To have a goodly peace concluded of
Between the realms of England and of France. Shakespeare.

4. To end.

And all around were nuptial bonds, the ties
Of love's assurance, and a train of lies,
That, made in lust, conclude in perjuries. Dryden.
We'll tell when 'tis enough,
Or if it wants the nice concluding bout. King.

CONCLUDENCY. n. f. [from concludent.]

Consequence; regular proof; logical deduction of reason.

Judgment concerning things to be known, or the neglect and conclusiveness of them, ends in decision. Hale.

CONCLUDENT. adj. [from conclude.] Decisive ending in just and undeniable consequences.

Though these kind of arguments may seem more obscure, yet, upon a due consideration of them, they are highly consequential and conclusive to my purpose. Hale.

CONCLUDINGLY. adv. [from conclude.]

With uncontrovertible evidence.

Examine whether the opinion you meet with, repugnant to what you were formerly imbued with, be conclusively demonstrated or not. Digby.

CONCLUSIBLE. adj. [from conclude.]

Determinable; certain by regular proof.

'Tis as certainly conclusible from God's presence, that they will voluntarily do this, as that they will do it at all. Hammond.

CONCLUSION. n. f. [from conclude.]

1. Determination; final decision.

Ways of peaceable conclusion there are but these two certain; the one a sentence of judicial decision, given by authority thereto appointed within ourselves; the other, the like kind of sentence given by a more universal authority. Hooker.

2. The collection from propositions premised; the consequence.

The conclusion of experience, from the time past to the time present, will not be found and perfect. Bacon's War with Spain.

And marrying divers principles and grounds,
Out of their match a true conclusion brings. Darwin.

Then doth the wit

Build fond conclusions on those idle grounds;
Then doth it by the good, and ill pursue. Darwin.

I only deal by rules of art,
Such as are lawful, and judge by Conclusions of astrology. Hudibras.

It is of the nature of principles, to yield a conclusion different from themselves. Tillotson.

He granted him both the major and the minor;
but denied him the conclusion. Addison.

3. The close; the last result of argumentative deduction.

Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter:
Fear God, and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man. Eccles.

I have been reasoning, and in conclusion have thought it best to return to what fortune hath made my home. Swift.

4. The event of experiments; experiment.

Her physician tells me,
She has pursued conclusions infinite
Of easy ways to die. Shakespeare.

We practise like wise all conclusions of grafting and inoculating, as well of wild trees as fruit trees. Bacon's New Atlantis.

5. The end; the last part.

I can speak no longer; yet I will strain myself to breathe out this one invocation, which shall be my conclusion. Howell.

6. In Shakespeare it seems to signify silence; confinement of the thoughts.

Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes
And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour, Denying upon me. Antony and Cleopatra.

CONCLUSIVE. adj. [from conclude.]

1. Decisive; giving the last determination to the opinion.

The agreeing votes of both houses were not by any law or reason conclusive to my judgment. King Charles.

The last dictate of the understanding is not always absolute in itself, nor conclusive to the will, yet it produces no antecedent nor external necessity. Bramhall's Answer to Hobbes.

They have secret reasons for what they seem to do, which, whatever they are, they must be equally conclusive for us as they were for them. Rogers.

2. Regularly consequential.

Those that are not men of art, not knowing the true forms of syllogism, cannot know whether they are made in right and conclusive modes and figures. Locke.

CONCLUSIVELY. adv. [from conclusive.]

Decisively; with final determination.

This I speak only to desire Eupolis not to speak peremptorily, or conclusively, touching the point of possibility, till they have heard me deduce
the means of the execution. Bacon.

CONCLUSIVENESS. n. f. [from conclusive.]

Power of determining the opinion; regular consequence.

Consideration of things to be known, of their several weights, conclusiveness, or evidence. Hale.

TO CONCOAGULATE. v. a. [from con and coagulate.]

To curdle or congeal one thing with another.

The saline parts of those, upon their solution
by the rain, may work upon those other substances, formerly concoagulated with them. Boyle.

They do but concoagulate themselves, without concoagulating with them any water. Boyle.

CONCOAGULATION. n. f. [from concoagulate.]

A coagulation by which different bodies are joined in one mass.

TO CONCOCT. v. a. [from concoquo, Lat.]

1. To digest by the stomach, so as to turn food to nutriment.

The working of purging medicines cometh two or three hours after the medicines taken;
for that the stomach first maketh a proof, whether it can concoct them. Bacon.

Assuredly he was a man of a feeble stomach, unable to concoct any great fortune, prosperous or adverse. Hayward.

The vital functions are performed by general and constant laws; the food is concocted, the heart beats, the blood circulates, the lungs play. Chyzer's Physic Principles.

The notions and sentiments of others judgment, as well as of our own memory, makes our property: it does, as it were, concoct our intellectual food, and turns it into a part of ourselves. Watson the Mind.

2. To purify or sublime by heat; to heighten to perfection.

The small close-lurking minister of fate,
Whose high concocted venom through the veins
A rapid lightning darts. Thomson's Summer.

3. To ripen.

The root which continueth ever in the earth, is still concocted by the earth; and fruits and grains are half a year in concocting, whereas leaves are out and perfect in a month. Bacon.

CONCOCTION. n. f. [from concoct.]

Digestion in the stomach; maturation by heat; the acceleration of any thing toward purity and perfection.

This hard rolling is between concoction and a simple maturation. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The constant notion of concoction is, that it should signify the degrees of alteration of one body into another, from crudity to perfect concoction, which is the ultimity of that action or process. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

He, though he knew not which soul spake,
Because both meant, both spake the same,
Might thence a new concoction take,
And part far purer than he came. Darwin.

CONCOLOUR. adj. [from concolor, Latin.]

Of one colour; without variety.

In concolour animals, and such as are confined unto the same colour, we measure not their beauty thereby; for if a crow or blackbird grow white, we account it more pretty. Boyle.

CONCOMITANCE. n. f. [from concomiti.]

CONCOMITANCY. } for, Lat. Substistence together with another thing.

The secondary action subsisteth not alone, but in concomitancy with the other; for the nostrils are useful for respiration and smelling, but the principal use is smelling. Bacon.

To argue from a concomitancy to a causality, is not infallibly conclusive. Glaucon.

CONCOMITANT. adj. [from concomitans, Lat.]

Conjoined with; concurrent with; coming and going with, as collateral, not causative or consequential.

The spirit that furthereth the extension or dilatation of bodies, and is ever concomitant with porosity and dryness. Bacon.

It has pleased our wise Creator to annex to several objects, as also to several of our thoughts, a concomitant pleasure; and that in several objects;
to several degrees. Locke.

CONCOMITANT. n. f. Companion; person or thing collaterally connected

These effects are, from the local motion of the air, a concomitant of the sound, and not from the sound. Bacon.

He made him the chief concomitant of his apparent and only son, in a journey of much adventure. Wotton.

In consumptions, the preternatural concomitants an universal heat of the body, a to-macious diarrhoea, and hot distillations, have all a corrosive quality. Harvey on Consumptions.

The other concomitant of ingratitude is hard-heartedness, or want of compassion. Smith.

Horror stalks around,
Wild staring, and his sad concomitant Despair, of abject look. Philips.

Reynard is a concomitant to greatness, as satires and invectives were an essential part of a Roman triumph. Addison.

And for tobacco, who could bear it?

Filthy concomitant of claret!

Where antecedents, concomitants and consequents, causes and effects, signs and things signified, subjects and adjuncts, are necessarily connected with each other, we may infer. Watts.

CONCOMITANTLY. adv. [from concomitant.] In company with others. Dict.

To CONCOMITATE. v. a. [concomitatus, Lat.] To be collaterally connected with any thing; to come and go with another; to attend; to accompany.

This simple bloody speculation of the lungs, is differenced from that which concomitates a pleurisy. Harvey on Consumptions.

CONCORD. n. f. [concordia, Latin.]

1. Agreement between persons or things; suitableness of one to another; peace; union; mutual kindness.

Had I power, I should

Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell,

Uproar the universal peace. Shakespeare.

What concord hath Christ with Belial? a Cor.

One shall rise

Of proud ambitious heart, who not content

With fair equality, fraternal state,

Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd

Over his brethren, and quite dispossess

Concord and law of nature from the earth. Milt.

Unsafe within the wind

Of such commotion; such as, to set forth

Great things by small, if, nature's concord broke,

Among the constellations war were sprung. Milt.

Kind concord, heavenly born! whose blissful reign

Holds this vast globe in one surrounding chain;

Soul of the world! Titchel.

2. A compact.

It appeareth by the concord made between

Henry and Roderick the Irish king. Davies.

3. Harmony; consent of sounds.

The man who hath not music in himself,

Not is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,

Is fit for treasons. Shakespeare.

4. Principal grammatical relation of one word to another, distinct from regimen.

Have those who have writ about declensions, concordis, and syntaxes, lost their labour? Locke.

CONCORDANCE. n. f. [concordantia, Lat.]

1. Agreement.

2. A book which shows in how many texts of scripture any word occurs.

I shall take it for an opportunity to tell you, how you are to rule the city out of a concordance.

South's Sermons, Dedications.

Some of you turn over a concordance, and there, having the principal word, introduce as much of the verse as will serve your turn. Swift.

An old concordance bound long since. Swift.

3. A concord in grammar; one of the three chief relations in speech. It is not now in use in this sense.

After the three concordances learned, let the master read unto him the epistles of Cicero. Ascham.

CONCORDANT. adi. [concordans, Lat.]

Agreeable; agreeing; correspondent;

harmonious.

Were every one employed in points concordant to their natures, professions, and arts, commonwealths would rise up of themselves. Brown.

CONCORDATE. n. f. [concordat, Fr. con- cordatum, Latin.] A compact; a convention.

How comes he to number the want of synods in the Gallican church among the grievances of that concordate, and as a mark of their slavery,

since he reckons all convocations of the clergy

in England to be useless and dangerous? Swift.

CONCORPORAL. adj. [from concorporo,

Vol. I.

Lat. to incorporate.] Of the same body. Dict.

To CONCORPORATE. v. a. [from con and corpus.] To unite in one mass or substance.

When we concorporate the sign with the signification, we conjoin the word with the spirit. Taylor.

To CONCORPORATE. v. n. [con and corpus.] To unite into one body.

Thus we chastise the god of wine

With water that is feminine,

Until the cooler nymph abate

His wrath, and so concorporate. Cleveland.

CONCORPORATION. n. f. [from concorporate.] Union in one mass; intimate mixture. Dict.

CONCOURSE. n. f. [concurfus, Latin.]

1. The confluence of many persons or things to one place.

Do all the nightly guards,

The city's watches, with the people's fears,

The concourse of all good men, strike thee nothing? Ben Jonson.

The coalition of the good frame of the universic was not the product of chance, or fortuious concourse of particles of matter. Hale.

Vain is his force, and vainer is his skill,

With such a concourse comes the flood of ill. Dryden's Fables.

2. The persons assembled.

The prince with wonder hears, from ev'ry part,

The noise and busy concourse of the mart. Dryd.

3. The point of junction or intersection of two bodies.

So soon as the upper glass is laid upon the lower, so as to touch it at one end, and to touch the drop at the other end, making with the lower glass an angle of about ten or fifteen mi-minutes; the drop will begin to move towards the concourse of the glasses, and will continue to move with an accelerated motion, till it arrives at that concourse of the glasses. Newton.

CONCREMATION. n. f. [from concremo, Lat. to burn together.] The act of burning many things together. Dict.

CONCREMENT. n. f. [from concreresco, Lat.] The mass formed by concretion;

a collection of matter growing together.

There is the collection of the matter into a more loose consistency, like clay, and thereby it is prepared to the concrement of a pebble or flint.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CONCRESCENCE. n. f. [from concreresco, Lat.] The act or quality of growing by the union of separate particles.

Seeing it is neither a substance perfect, nor incomplete, how any other substance should thence take concrecence, hath not been taught. Raleigh.

To CONCRETE. v. n. [concreresco, Lat.]

To coalesce into one mass; to grow by the union and collection of parts.

The mineral or metallick matter, thus con-

creting with the crystalline, is equally diffused throughout the body of it. Woodward.

When any saline liquor is evaporated to a cuticle, and not cool, the salt concretes in regular figures; which argues that the particles of the salt, before they concrested, floated in the liquor

at equal distances, in rank and file. Newton.

The blood of some who died of the plague could not be made to concrete, by reason of the putrefaction begun. Arbutnot.

To CONCRETE. v. a. To form by concretion; to form by the coalition of scattered particles.

That there are in our inferior world divers bodies, that are concreted out of others, is beyond all dispute; we see it in the meteors. Hale.

CONCRETE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Formed by concretion; formed by coalition of separate particles into one mass.

The first concrete state, or consistent surface, of the chaos, must be of the same figure as the last liquid state. Burnet.

2. [In logic.] Not abstract: applied to a subject.

A kind of mutual commutation there is, whereby those concrete names, God and man, when we speak of Christ, do take interchangeably one another's room; so that, for truth of speech, it skilleth not whether we say that the son of God hath created the world, and the son of man by his death hath saved it; or else that the son of man did create, and the son of God died to save, the world. Hooker.

Concrete terms, while they express the quality, do also either express, or imply, or refer to some subject to which it belongs; as white, round, long, broad, wise, mortal, living, dead: but these are not always noun adjectives in a grammatical sense; for a knave, a fool, a philosopher, and many other concretes, are substantives, as well as knavery, folly, and philosophy, which are the abstract terms that belong to them. Watts' Logic.

CONCRETE. n. f. A mass formed by concretion; or, union of various parts adhering to each other.

If gold itself be admitted, as it must be, for a porous concrete, the proportion of void to body, in the texture of common air, will be so much the greater. Bentley's Sermons.

CONCRETELY. adv. [from concrete.] In a manner including the subject with the predicate; not abstractly.

Sin, considered not abstractedly for the mere act of obliquity, but concretely, with such a special dependance of it upon the will as serves to render the agent guilty. Norris.

CONCRETENESS. n. f. [from concrete.] Coagulation; collection of fluids into a solid mass. Dict.

CONCRETION. n. f. [from concrete.]

1. The act of concreting; coalition.

2. The mass formed by a coalition of separate particles.

Some plants, upon the top of the sea, are supposed to grow at some concretion of fluid from the water, where the sea breath little. Bacon.

Heat, in general, doth not resolve and attenuate the juices of a human body; for too great heat will produce concretions. Boerhaave.

CONCRETIVE. adj. [from concrete.]

Having the power to produce concretions; coagulative.

When wood and other bodies petrify, we do not ascribe their induration to cold, but unto ta-and are made fearful to offend, though it be but in a wandering cogitation. Hooker.

In our faces the evident signs
Of foul concupiscence; whence evil store,
Even shame, the last of evils. Milton.

Nor can they say, that the difference of climate inclines one nation to concupiscence and sensual pleasures, another to blood-thirstiness: it would discover great ignorance not to know, that a people has been overrun with recently invented vice. Bentley's Sermons.

CONCUPISCENT. adj. [concupiscens,
Lat.] Libidinous; lecherous.

He would not, but by gift of my chaste body

For, without the concurrent consent of all these three parts of the legislature, no such law is or can be made. Hale.

This sole vital faculty is not sufficient to exterminate noxious humours to the periphery, unless the animal faculty be concurrent with it,
to supply the fibres with animal spirits. Harvey.

All combin'd,
Your beauty, and my impotence of mind;
And his concurrent flames that blew my fire;
For still our kindred souls had one desire. Dryd.

2. Conjoined; associate; concomitant.

There is no difference between the concurrent echo and the iterant, but the quickness or slowness of the return. Bacon.

CONCURRENT. n. f. [from concur.] That which concurs; a contributory cause.

To all affairs of importance there are three necessary concurrences, without which they can never be dispatched; time, industry, and faculties.
Decay of Piety.

CONCUSSION. n. f. [concussio, Lat.]

1. The act of shaking; agitation; tremefaction.

It is believed that great ringing of bells, in

With right hands plighted, pledges of good-will. Fairy Queen.

To CONGE. v. n. [from the noun.] To take leave.

I have conged with the duke, and done my adieu with his nearest. Shakespeare.

CONGE D'ELIRE is French; and signifies in common law, the king's permission royal to a dean and chapter, in time of vacation, to chuse a bishop. The king, as sovereign patron of all archbishopsricks, bishopsricks, and other ecclesiastical dignities, had, in ancient times, the free appointment of all ecclesiastical dignities; investing them first per baculum & annulum, and afterwards by his letters patent. In process of time he made the election over to others, under certain forms and conditions; as, that they should, at every vacation, before they chuse, demand of the king a congé d'elire, that is, licence to proceed to election. Cowell.

A woman, when she has made her own choice, for form's sake, sends a congé d'elire to her friends. Spektator.

CONGE. n. f. [In architecture.] A moulding in form of a quarter round, or a cavetto, which serves to separate two members from one another: such is that which joins the shaft of the column to the cincture. Chambers.

To CONGEAL. v. a. [congelare, Latin.]

1. To turn, by frost, from a fluid to a solid state.

What more miraculous thing may be told,
Than ice, which is congeal'd with senseless cold,
Should kindle fire by wonderful device? Spenser.

In whose capacious womb
A vapoury deluge lies, to snow congeal'd.
Thomson's Winter.

2. To bind or fix, as by cold.

Oh, gentlemen, see! see! dead Henry's wounds
Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Too much sadness hath congeal'd your blood.
Shakespeare.

To CONGEAL. v. n. To concreate; to gather into a mass by cold.

In the midst of molten lead, when it begins to congeal, make a little dent, into which put quicksilver wrapt in linen, and it will fix and run no more, and endure the hammer. Bacon.

When water congeals, the surface of the ice is smooth and level, as the surface of the water was before. Barnes's Theory.

CONGEALMENT. n. f. [from congeal.] The clot formed by congelation; concretion.

Enter the city, clip your wives, your friends;
Tell them your feats, whilst they with joyful tears
Wash the congealment from your wounds. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

CONGEALABLE. adj. [from congeal.] Susceptible of congelation; capable of losing its fluidity.

The consistencies of bodies are very divers:
dense, rare, tangible, pneumatical, fixed, hard,

CON

soft, congelable, not congelable, liquefiable, not liquefiable. Bacon.

The chymists define salt, from some of its properties, to be a body fixable in the fire, and congealable again by cold into brittle globes or crystals. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CONGELATION. n. f. [from congeal.]

1. Act of turning fluids to solids by cold.

The capillary tubes are obstructed either by outward compression or congelation of the fluid. Arbutnot on Aliments.

There are congelations of the redundant water, precipitations, and many other operations. Arbutnot on Air.

2. State of being congealed, or made solid by cold.

Many waters and springs will never freeze; and many parts in rivers and lakes, where there are mineral eruptions, will still persist without congelation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CONGENER. n. f. [Latin.] A thing of the same kind or nature.

The cherry-tree has been often grafted on the laurel, to which it is a congener. Miller.

CONGENEROUS. adj. [congener, Latin.]

Of the same kind; arising from the same original.

Those bodies, being of a congenereous nature, do readily receive the impressions of their nature. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CONSTABLE. n. f. [comes stabuli, as it is supposed.]

1. Lord high constable is an ancient officer of the crown. The function of the constable of England consisted in the care of the common peace of the land in deeds of arms, and in matters of war.

To the court of the constable and marshal belonged the cognizance of contracts, deeds of arms without the realm, and combats and blazonry of arms within

it. The first constable of England was created by the Conqueror, and the office

continued hereditary till the thirteenth of Henry VIII. when it was laid aside, as being so powerful as to become troublesome to the king. From these mighty magistrates are derived the inferior constables of hundreds and franchises;

two of whom were ordained, in the thirteenth of Edward I. to be chosen in every hundred, for the conservation of the peace, and view of armour.

These are now called high constables;

because continuance of time, and increase both of people and offences, have occasioned others in every town of inferior authority, called petty constables.

Besides these, we have constables denominated from particular places; as, constable of the Tower, of Dover Castle, of the Castle of Carnarvon; but these are properly castellani, or governors of castles. Cowell. Chambers.

When I came hither, I was lord high constable,
And duke of Buckingham; now poor Edward

Bohun. Shaksp. care.

The knave constable, had set me i' the stocks,

I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written. John.
Gently instructed I shall hence depart,
Greatly in peace of thought, and have my fill
Of knowledge what this vessel can contain. Milton.

What thy stores contain bring forth, and pour Abundance. Milton.

2. To comprehend; to comprise.

What seem'd fair in all the world, seem'd now
Mean, or in her summ'd up, in her contain'd. Milton.

The earth,
Though in comparison of heav'n so small,
Nor glist'ring, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun, that barren shines. Milton.

3. To comprise, as a writing.

Wherefore also it is contained in the scripture. Peter.

4. To restrain; to withhold; to keep within bounds.

All men should be contained in duty ever after, without the terror of warlike forces. Spenser on Ireland.

Their king's person contains the unruly people from evil occasions. Spenser.

I tell you, first,
If you should smile, he grows impatient.—
—Fear not, my lord, we can contain ourselves. Shakespeare.

To CONTAIN. v. n. To live in continence.

I felt the ardour of my passion increase, till I could no longer contain. Arbuthnot and Pope.

CONTAINABLE. adj. [from contain.] Possible to be contained.

The air, containable within the cavity of the colic, amounted to eleven grains. Boyle.

To CONTAMINATE. v. a. [contamino, Latin.] To defile; to pollute; to corrupt by base mixture.

Shall we now
Contaminate our fingers with base bribes? Shaksp.
A base pander holds the chamber-door,
Whit'd by a slave, no gentler than a dog,
His fairest daughter is contaminated. Shaksp.
Do it not with poison; strangle her in her bed,
Even in the bed she hath contaminated. Shaksp.
I quickly shed

Some of his bastard blood, and in disgrace
Bespoke him thus: contaminated, base,
And misbegotten blood I spill of thine. Shaksp.
Though it be necessitated, by its relation to reth, to a terrestrial converse; yet 'tis, like the sun, without contaminating its beams. Glanville.

He that lies with another man's wife, propagates children in another's family for him to keep, and contaminates the honour thereof as much as in him lies. Ascham's Parergon.

CONTAMINATION. n. f. [from contaminare.] Pollution; defilement.

CONTAMINATED. adj. [contaminatus, Latin.] Violated; polluted. Dict.

To CONTEMN. v. a. [contemno, Lat.] To despise; to scorn; to slight; to disregard; to neglect; to defy.

Yet better thus, and known to be contemned,
Than still contemned and flattered. Shaksp.
Ere, thy contempt of life and pleasure seems
To argue in thee something more sublime
And excellent than what thy mind contemns. Milton.

Pygmalion then the Tyrian Kephre saw'd,
One who contemn'd divine and human laws;
Then drove endured. Dryden's Virg. Emul.

CONTEMNER. n. f. [from contemno.] One that contemns; a despiiser; a scorner.

He counsels him to prosecute innovators of worship, not only as contemners of the gods, but enemies of the state. South.

To CONTEMPER. v. a. [contempero,

Latin.] To moderate; to reduce to a lower degree by mixing something of opposite qualities.

The leaves qualify and temper the heat, and hinder the evaporation of moisture. Ray.

CONTEMPERAMENT. n. f. [from contempero, Lat.] The degree of any quality as tempered to others.

There is nearly an equal temperament of the warmth of our bodies to that of the hottest part of the atmosphere. Ducham.

To CONTEMPERATE. v. a. [from contemper.] To diminish any quality by something contrary; to moderate; to temper.

The mighty Nile and Niger do not only moisten and temperate the air, but refresh and humec-tate the earth. Brown.

If blood abound, let it out, regulating the patient's diet, and temperating the humours. Wiseman's Surgery.

CONTEMPERATION. n. f. [from contemperate.]

1. The act of diminishing any quality by admixture of the contrary; the act of moderating or tempering.

The use of air, without which there is no continuation in life, is not nutrition, but the temperament of flavour in the heart. Brown.

2. Proportionate mixture; proportion.

There is not greater variety in men's faces, and in the temperaments of their natural humours, than there is in their phantasies. Hale.

To CONTEMPLATE. v. a. [contemplor, Lat.] This seems to have been once accented on the first syllable.] To consider with continued attention; to study; to meditate.

There is not much difficulty in confining the mind to contemplate what we have a great desire to know. Watts.

CONTEMPLATE. v. n. To muse; to think studiously with long attention.

So many hours must I take my rest;
So many hours must I contemplate. Shaksp.
Sapient had an heaven of glass, which he trod upon, contemplating over the same as if he had been Jupiter. Peacocks.

How can I consider what belongs to myself,
when I have been so long contemplating on you?
Dryden's Juvenal, Preface.

CONTEMPLATION. n. f. [from contemplate.]

1. Meditation; studious thought on any subject; continued attention.

How now? what serious contemplation are you in? Shaksp.
Contemplation is keeping the idea, which is brought into the mind, for some time actually in view. Locke.

2. Holy meditation; a holy exercise of the soul, employed in attention to sacred things.

I have breath'd a secret vow
To live in prayer and contemplation,
Only attended by Neriis here. Shaksp.

3. The faculty of study: opposed to the power of action.

There are two functions, contemplation and practise, according to that general division of objects; some of which entertain our speculation, others employ our actions. South.

CONTEMPLATIVE. adj. [from contemplate.]

1. Given to thought or study; studious; thoughtful.

Fixt and contemplative their looks,
Still turning over nature's books. Deham.

2. Employed in study; dedicated to study.

I am no courtier, nor versed in state affairs:
my life hath rather been contemplative than active. Bacon.

Contemplative men may be without the picture of discovering the secrets of state, and measure of action are commonly without the pleasure of tracing the secrets of divine art. Gray.

3. Having the power of thought or meditation.

So many kinds of creatures might be to excite the contemplative faculty of man. Ray.

CONTEMPLATIVELY. adv. [from contemplative.] Thoughtfully; attentively; with deep attention.

CONTEMPLATOR. n. f. [Lat.] One employed in study; an inquirer after knowledge; a student.

In the Persian tongue the word mugis imports as much as a contemplator of divine and heavenly science. Raleigh's History.

The Platonick contemplators reject both these descriptions, founded upon parts and colours.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CONTEMPORARY. adj. [contemporain, Fr.]

1. Living in the same age; coetaneous.

Albert Durer was contemporary to Lucas.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. Born at the same time.

A grove born with himself he sees,
And loves his old contemporary trees. Cowley.

3. Existing at the same point of time.

It is impossible to make the ideas of yesterday, to-day, and to-morrow, to be the same; or being ages past and future together, and make them contemporary. Locke.

CONTEMPORARY. n. f. One who lives at the same time with another.

All this in blooming youth you have achiev'd;
Nor are your foil'd contemporaries griev'd. Dryd.
As he has been favourable to me, he will hear of his kindness from our contemporaries; for we are fallen into an age illiterate, contentious, and detaching. Dryden's Juvenal, Preface.

The active part of mankind, as they do must for the good of their contemporaries, very deservedly gain the greatest share in their applauses.
Addison's Freeholder.

To CONTEMPORISE. v. a. [con and tempus, Latin.] To make contemporary; to place in the same age.

The indifference of their existences, contemporised into our actions, admits a farther consideration. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CONTEMPT. n. f. [contemptus, Lat.]

1. The act of despising others; slight regard; scorn.

It was neither in contempt nor pride that I did not bow. Esher.

The shame of being miserable,
Exposes men to scorn and base contempt,
Even from their nearest friends. Deham.

There is no action, in the behaviour of one man towards another, of which human nature is more impatient than of contempt; it being an undervaluing of a man, upon a belief of his utter uselessness and inability, and a spiteful endeavour to engage the rest of the world in the same slight esteem of him. Seneca.

His friend smil'd scornful, and with proud contempt

Rejects aside what his fellow dreamt. Dryden.
Nothing, says Longinus, can be great, the contempt of which is great. Addison.

2. The state of being despised; wileness.

The place was like to come unto contempt. Milton.

CONTEMPTIBLE. adj. [from contempt.]

1. Worthy of contempt; deserving scorn.

No man truly knows himself, but he groweth daily more contemptible in his own eyes. Taylor.

- From no one vice exempt,
And most contemptible to shun contempt. Pope.
2. Despised; scorned; neglected.
There is not so contemptible a plant or animal, that does not confound the most enlarged understanding. Locke.
3. Scornful; apt to despise; contemptuous. This is no proper use.
If she should make tender of her love, 'tis very possible he'll scorn it; for the man hath a contemptible spirit. Shakespeare.
- CONTEMPTIBLENESS. n. f. [from con- temptible.] The state of being contemptible; the state of being despised;
meanness; vileness; baseness; cheapness.
Who, by a steady practice of virtue, comes to discern the contemptibleness of baits wherewith he allures us. Decay of Piety.
- CONTEMPTIBLY. adv. [from contemptible.]
Meanly; in a manner deserving contempt.
Know'st thou not
Their language, and their ways? They also know,
And reason not contemptibly. Milton.
- CONTEMPTUOUS. adj. [from contempt.]
Scornful; apt to despise; using words or actions of contempt; insolent.
To neglect God all our lives, and know that we neglect him; to offend God voluntarily, and know that we offend him, casting our hopes on the peace which we trust to make at parting, is no other than a rebellious presumption, and even a contemptuous laughing to scorn and deriding of God, his laws, and precepts. Raleigh.
Some much averse I found, and wondrous harsh,
Contemptuous, proud, set on revenge and spite. Milt. Agon.
- Rome, the proudest part of the heathen world, entertained the most contemptuous opinion of the Jews. Atterbury.
- CONTEMPTUOUSLY. adv. [from contemp- tuous.] With scorn; with despite;
scornfully; despitefully.
I throw my name against the bruising stone,
Trampling contemptuously on thy diadem. Shakf.
The apostles and most eminent christians were poor, and used contemptuously. Taylor.
If he governs tyrannically in youth, he will be treated contemptuously in age; and the baser his enemies, the more intolerable the affront.
L'Estrange.
- A wife man would not speak contemptuously of a prince, though out of his dominions. Tilbison.
- CONTEMPTUOUSNESS. n. f. [from con- temptuous.] Disposition to contempt;
insolence. Ditt.

Hector's forehead spit forth blood
At Grecian swords contending. Shakespeare.
His wonders and his praises do contend
Which should be thine or his. Shakespeare.
Death and nature do contend about them,
Whether they live or die. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Distress not the Moabites, neither contend with them in battle; for I will not give thee of their land. Deut.
2. To vie; to act in emulation.
You sit above, and see vain men below
Contend for what you only can bestow. Dryden.
3. It has for before the ground or cause of contention.
The question which our author would contend for, if he did not forget it, is, what persons have a right to be obeyed. Locke.
4. Sometimes about.
He will find that many things he fiercely contended about were trivial. Decay of Piety.
5. It has with before the opponent.
VOL. I.

- This battle fares like to the morning's war,
When dying clouds contend with growing light.
Shakespeare's Henry v.
- If we consider him as our Maker, we cannot contend with him. Temple.
6. Sometimes against.
In ambitious strength I did Content against thy valour. Shakespeare.
- TO CONTE'ND. v. a. To dispute any thing; to contest.
Their airy limbs in sports they exercise,
And on the green contend the wrestler's prize.
Dryden's Æneid.
A time of war at length will come,
When Carthago shall contend the world with Rome. Dryden.
Thus low we lie,
Shut from this day and that contended day. Dryd.
- CONTE'NDENT. n. f. [from contend.] Antagonist; opponent; champion; combatant. Not used.
In all notable changes and revolutions, the contentents have been still made a prey to the third party. L'Estrange.
- CONTE'NDER. n. f. [from contend.] Combatant; champion.
The contenters for it look upon it as undeniable. Locke.
Those disputes often arise in good earnest, where the two contenters do really believe the different propositions which they support. Watts.
- CONTE'NT. adj. [contentus, Lat.]
1. Satisfied, so as not to repine; easy, though not highly pleased.
Born to the spacious empire of the Nine,
One would have thought she should have been content.
To manage well that mighty government. Dryd.
Who is content, is happy. Locke.
A man is perfectly content with the state he is in, when he is perfectly without any uneasiness. Locke.
Foe to loud praise, and friend to learned ease,
Content with science in the vale of peace. Pope.
2. Satisfied, so as not to oppose.
Submit you to the people's voices,
Allow their officers, and be content
To suffer lawful censure. Shakespeare.
- TO CONTE'NT. v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To satisfy, so as to stop complaint; not to offend; to appease, without plenary happiness or complete gratification.
Content thyself with this much, and let this satisfy thee, that I love thee. Sidney.
Great minds do sometimes content themselves to threaten, when they could destroy. Tilbison.
Do not content yourselves with obscure and confused ideas where clearer are to be attained.
Watts' Logic.
2. To please; to gratify.
Is the adder better than the eel
Because his painted skin contents the eye? Shakf.
It doth much content me,
To hear him so inclin'd. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
If a man so temper his actions, as in some one of them he doth content every faction, the musick of praise will be fuller. Bacon.
Wheat is contented with a meager earthy and contenting with a suitable gain. Carew.
- CONTE'NT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Moderate happiness; such satisfaction as, though it does not fill up desire, appeases complaint.
Nought's had, all's spent,
Where our desire is got without content. Shakf.
One thought content the good to be enjoy'd;
This every little accident destroy'd. Dryden.
A wife content his even soul secur'd;
By want not shaken, nor by wealth allur'd. Smith on Philips.

2. Acquiescence; satisfaction in a thing unexamined.
Others for language all their care express,
And value books, as women men, for drest;
Their praise is still—the stile is excellent;
The sense they humbly take upon content. Pope.
3. [from contentus, contained.] That which is contained, or included, in any thing.
Though my heart's content firm love doth bear,
Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear. Shakespeare.
Scarcely any thing can be determined of the particular contents of any single mass of ore by mere inspection. Woodward.
Experiments are made on the blood of healthy animals: in a weak habit serum might afford other contents. Arbuthnot.
4. The power of containing; extent;
capacity.
This island had their fifteen hundred strong ships of great content. Bacon.
It were good to know the geometrical content, figure, and situation of all the lands of a kingdom, according to natural bounds. Graunt.
5. That which is comprised in a writing.
In this sense the plural only is in use.
I have a letter from her,
Of such contents as you will wonder at. Shakespeare.
I shall prove these writings not counterfeit;
but authentick; and the contents true, and worthy of a divine original. Grew's Cefmologia.
The contents of both books come before those of the first book, in the thread of the story. Addison's Spectator.
- CONTENTA'TION. n. f. [from content.]
Satisfaction; content. Out of use.
I seek no better warrant than my own conscience, nor no greater pleasure than mine own contentation. Sidney.
Fourteen years space, during the minority of Gordianus, the government was with great applause and contentation in the hands of Mithreus, a pedant. Bacon.
The shield was not long after incruited with a new rust, and is the same, a cut of which hath been engrained and exhibited, to the great contentation of the learned. Arbuthnot and Pope.
- CONTE'NTED. participial adj. [from con- tent.] Satisfied; at quiet; not repin-ing; not demanding more; easy, though not plenary happy.
Barbarossa, in hope by sufferance to obtain another kingdom, seemed contented with the answer. Knox's History.
Dream not of other worlds,
Contented that thus far has been reveal'd,
Not of earth only, but of highest heav'n. Milton's Par. Lost.
If he can defy
Some nobler foe approach, to him he calls,
And begs his fate, and then contented falls. Denham.
To distant lands Vertumnus never roves,
Like you contented with his native groves. Pope.
- CONTENTEDNESS. n. f. [from contented.]
State of satisfaction in any lot.
Angling was, after tedious study, a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, a procure of contentedness. Walton's Angler.
- CONTENTION. n. f. [contentio, Lat.]
1. Strife; debate; contest; quarrel; mutual opposition.
Can we with manners ask what was the dis-ference?
—Safely, I think; 'twas a contention in publick. Shakespeare.
Avoid foolish questions and genealogies, and contentions and strivings. Titus.
Can they keep themselves in a perpetual contention with their ease, their reason, and their

God, and not endure a short combat with a sinful custom? Decay of Piety.

The ancients made contention the principle that reigned in the chaos at first, and then love; the one to express the divisions, and the other the union of all parties in the middle and common bond. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. Emulation; endeavour to excel.

Sons and brother at a strife?

What is your quarrel? how began it first?

—No quarrel, but a sweet contention. Shaksp.

3. Begeriness; zeal; ardour; vehemence of endeavour.

Your own earnestness and contention to effect what you are about, will continually suggest to you several artifices. Holder.

This is an end, which at first view appears worthy our utmost contention to obtain. Rogers.

CONTENTIOUS. adj. [from contend.] Quarrelsome; given to debate; perverse; not peaceable.

Thou thinkest much that this contentious storm invades us to the skin. Shakspere's King Lear.

2. [In law.] A continual claim is made from time to time, within every year and day, to land or other thing, which,
in some respect, we cannot attain without danger. For example, if I be dis-seised of land, into which, though I have right into it, I dare not enter for fear of beating; it behooveth me to hold on my right of entry to the best opportunity of me and mine heir, by approaching as near it as I can, once every year as long as I live; and so I have the right of entry to my heir. Corwell.

3. It is sometimes used for perpetual.

CONTINUALLY. adv. [from continual.]

1. Without pause; without interruption.

The drawing of boughs into the inside of a room, where fire is continually kept, hath been tried with grapes. Bacon.

duration should live in a continued motion, without that rest whereby all others continue. Brown's Façar Errors.

3. To persevere.

If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed. John.

Down rush'd the rain

Impetuous, and continued till the earth

No more was seen. Milton.

2b CONTINUE. v. n.

1. To protract, or hold without interruption.

O continue thy loving kindness unto them.

Psalms.

You know how to make yourself happy, by only continuing such a life as you have been long accustomed to lead. Pope.

2. To unite without a chasm, or intervening substance.

The use of the navel is to continue the infant unto the mother, and by the vessels thereof to convey its aliments and sustenance. Brown.

This request was never before made by any other birds; but, contrariwise, they were humble suitors to have the benefit and protection of the English laws. Davies on Ireland.

The sun may set and rise:

But we, contrariwise,

Sleep, after our short light,

One everlasting night. Raleigh.

CONTRARY. adj. [contrarius, Latin.]

1. Opposite; contradictory; not simply different, or not alike, but repugnant, so that one destroys or obstructs the other.

Perhaps some thing, repugnant to her kind, By strong antipathy the soul may kill; But what can be contrary to the mind, Which holds all contraries in concord still? Davies.

2. Inconsistent; disagreeing.

He that believes it, and yet lives contrary to it, knows that he hath no reason for what he does. Tillotson.

The various and contrary choices that men make in the world, do not argue that they do not all pursue good; but that the same thing is not good to every man alike. Locke.

3. Adverse; in an opposite direction.

The ship was in the midst of the sea, tossed with the waves; for the wind was contrary.

Matthew.

CONTRARY. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A thing of opposite qualities.

No contraries hold more antipathy,

Than I and such a knave.

Shakespeare.

He sung

Why contraries feed thunder in the cloud.

Cowley's Davideis.

Honour should be concern'd in honour's cause;
That is not to be cur'd by contraries;

As bodies are, whose health is often drawn

From rankest poisons. Southern's Oronoko.

2. A proposition contrary to some other;
a fact contrary to the allegation.

The instances brought by our author are but slender proofs of a right to civil power and dominion in the first-born, and do rather shew the contrary.

Locke.

3. On the CONTRARY. In opposition;
on the other side.

He pleaded still not guilty;

The king's attorney, on the contrary,

Urg'd on examinations, proofs, confessions,

Of diverse witnesses.

Shakspeare Henry VIII.

If justice stood on the side of the single person, it ought to give good men pleasure to see that right should take place; but when, on the contrary, the commonweal of a whole nation is overborn by private interest, what good man but must inquire?

Swift.

4. To the CONTRARY. To a contrary purpose; to an opposite intent.

They did it, not for want of instruction to the contrary.

Stillingfleet.

To CONTRARY. v. a. [contrariar, Fr.]

To oppose; to thwart; to contradict.

When I came to court, I was advised not to contrary the king.

Latimer.

Finding in him the force of it, he would no further contrary it, but employ all his service to medicine it.

Sidney.

CONTRAST. n. f. [contrast, French.]

Opposition and dissimilitude of figures, by which one contributes to the visibility or effect of another.

To CONTRAST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To place in opposition, so that one

2. To show another figure to advantage by its colour or situation.

The figures of the groups must not be all on a side, that is, with their faces, and bodies all turned the same way; but must contrast each other by their several positions.

Dryden.

CONTRAVALLATION. n. f. [from contra and vallo, Latin.] The fortification thrown up by the besiegers, round a city, to hinder the sallies of the gar-

For they have grudg'd us contribution.

Shakspeare.

CONTRIBUTIVE. adj. [from contribute.]

That has the power or quality of promoting any purpose in concurrence with other motives.

As the value of the promises renders them most proper incentives to virtue, so the manner of proposing we shall find also highly contributive
to the same end.

Deacy of Perty.

CONTRIBUTOR. n. f. [from contribute.]

One that bears a part in some common design; one that helps forward, or exerts his endeavours to some end, in conjunction with others.

I promis'd we would be contributors,
And bear his charge of warring, whatsoever.

Shakspeare.

A grand contributor to our dissensions is passion.

Deacy of Perty.

Art thou a true lover of thy country? zealous for its religious and civil liberties? and a cheerful contributor to all those publick expences which have been thought necessary to secure them?

Attobury.

The whole people were witnesses to the building of the ark and tabernacle; they were all contributors to it.

Forbes.

CONTRIBUTORY. adj. [from contribute.]

To CONTRISTATE. v. a. [contristio, Latin.] To sadden; to make sorrowful; to make melancholy. Not used.

Blackness and darkness are but privatives, and therefore have little or no activity: somewhat they do contristate, but very little.

Bacon.

CONTRISTATION. n. f. [from contristate.]

The act of making sad; the state of being made sad; sorrow; heaviness of heart; sadness; sorrowfulness; gloomineness; grief; moan; mournfulness; trouble; discontent; melancholy. Not used.

Insects and noxious smells, such as were of sacrifices, were thought to intoxicate the brain, and to dispose men to devotion; which they may do by a kind of sadness and contristation of the spirits, and partly also by heating and exalting them.

Bacon's Natural History.

CONTRITE. adj. [contritus, Latin.]

1. Bruised; much worn.

2. Worn with sorrow; harassed with the sense of guilt; penitent. In the books of divines, contrite is sorrowful for sin, from the love of God and desire of pleasing him; and attrite is sorrowful for sin, from the fear of punishment.

I Richard's body have interred now;
And on it have bestow'd more contrite tears,
Than from it illud forced drops of blood.

Shakspeare's Henry V.

With tears

Wat'ring the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek.

Milton.

The contrite sinner is restored to pardon, and,
through faith in Christ, our repentance is entitled to salvation.

Rogers.

CONTRITENESS. n. f. [from contrite.]

Contrition; repentance.

Diä.

CONTRITION. n. f. [from contrite.]

1. The act of grinding, or rubbing to powder.

Some of those coloured powders, which painters use, may have their colours a little changed, by being very elaborately and finely ground;
where I see not what can be justly pretended for those changes, besides the breaking of their parts into its parts by that contrition.

Newton's Opt.

2. Penitence; sorrow for sin: in the strict sense, the sorrow which arises from the desire to please God; distinguished from attrition, or imperfect repentance produced by dread of hell.

What is sorrow and contrition for sin? A being grieved with the conscience of sin, not only that we have thereby incurred such danger, but also that we have so unkindly grieved and provoked so good a God.

Hemman's Practical Catechism.

Fruits of more pleasing favour, from thy seed Sown with contrition in his heart, than those Which, his own hand manning, all the trees
Of Paradise could have produc'd.

Milton.

Your fasting, contrition, and mortification, when the church and state appoints, and that especially in times of greater riot and luxury.

Spratt's Sermons.

My future days shall be one whole contrition;
A chapel will I build with large endowment,
Where every day an hundred aged men
Shall all hold up their wither'd hands to heav'n.

Dryden.

CONTRIVABLE. adj. [from contrive.]

Possible to be planned by the mind;
possible to be invented and adjusted.

It will hence appear how a perpetual motion may seem easily contrivable.

Wilkins's Dædalus.

CONTRIVANCE. n. f. [from contrive.]

1. The act of contriving; excogitation;
the thing contrived.

There is no work impossible to these contrivances, but there may be as much acted by this art as can be fancied by imagination.

Wilkins.

Infringed, you'll explore
Divine contrivance, and a God adore. Blackmore.
2. Scheme; plan; disposition of parts or causes.
Our bodies are made according to the most curious artifice, and orderly contrivance. Glennville's Scops.

3. A conceit; a plot; an artifice.
Have I not manag'd my contrivance well,
To try your love, and make you doubt of mine? Dryden.
There might be a feint, a contrivance in the matter, to draw him into some secret ambush. Atterbury.

TO CONTRIVE. v. a. [controuer, Fr.]

1. To plan out; to excogitate.
One that kept in the contriving lust, and waked to do it. Shakspeare's King Lear.
What more likely to contrive this admirable frame of the universe than infinite wisdom? Tillotson.

Our poet has always some beautiful design, which he first establishes, and then contrives the means which will naturally conduct him to his end. Dryden.

2. To wear away. Out of use.

Three ages, such as mortal men contrive. Fairy Queen.
Please ye, we may contrive this afternoon, And quail carouses to our mistress' health. Shakspeare.

CONTRIVER. n. f. [from contrive.] An inventor; one that plans a design; a schemer.

1, the mistress of your charms,
The close contriver of all harms,
Was never call'd to bear my part. Shakspeare.
Epeus, who the fraud's contriver was. Denham.
Plain loyalty, not built on hope,
I leave to your contriver, Pope:
None loves his king and country better,
Yet none was ever less their debtor. Swift.

Scenes of blood and desolation, I had painted as the common effects of those destructive machines; whereof, he said, some evil genius, enemy to mankind, must have been the first contriver. Swift's Gulliver's Travels.

CONTRÔL. n. f. [control, that is, contre role, French.]

1. A register or account kept by another officer, that each may be examined by the other.

2. Check; restraint.

Let partial spirits still aloud complain,
Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign;
And own no liberty, but where they may,
Without control, upon their fellows prey. Waller.
He shall feel a force upon himself from within, and from the control of his own principles, to engage him to do worthily. South.

If the sinner shall win so complete a victory over his conscience, that all those considerations shall be able to strike no terror into his mind, lay no restraint upon his lusts, no control upon his appetites, he is certainly too strong for the means of grace. South's Sermons.

Speak, what Phœbus has inspir'd thy soul
For common good, and speak without control. Dryden's Homer.

3. Power; authority; superintendence.
The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,
Are their males' subjects, and at their controls. Shakspeare.

TO CONTRÔL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To keep under check by a counter reckoning.

2. To govern; to restrain; to subject.

Authority to convent, to control, to punish, as far as with excommunication, whomsoever they think worthy. Hooker.

Give me a staff of honour for mine age;
But not a sceptre to control the world. Shakspeare.
Who shall control me for my works? Ecclesi.
I feel my virtue struggling in my soul;
But stronger passion does its pow'r control. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

With this he did a herd of goats control,
Which by the way he met, and slyly stole;
Clad like a country swain he pip'd and sung,
And playing drove his jolly troop along. Dryden.
O, dearest Andrew, says the humble drail, Henceforth may I obey, and thou control. Prior.

3. To overpower; to confute: as, be controlled all the evidence of his adversary.

As for the time while he was in the Tower, and the manner of his brother's death, and his own escape, the knew they were things that a very few could control. Bacon's Henry VII.

CONTRO'LLABLE. adj. [from control.]

Subject to control; subject to command; subject to be over-ruled.

Passion is the drunkenness of the mind, and therefore, its his present workings, not controllable by reason. South.

CONTRO'LLER. n. f. [from control.] One that has the power of governing or restraining; a superintendent.

He does not calm his contumelious spirit,
Nor cease to be an arrogant controller. Shakspeare.
The great controller of our fate
Deign'd to be man, and liv'd in low estate. Dryden.

CONTRO'LLERSHIP. n. f. [from controller.]

The office of a controller.

Were it reason that we should suffer the same to pass without controlment, in that current meaning, whereby every where it prevaileth. Hooker.

4. Resistance; hostility.

Here have we war for war, and blood for blood, Controlment for controlment. Shakspeare.

CONTRÔVERSIAL. adj. [from controversy.] Relating to disputes; disputatious.

It happens in controversial discourses as it does in the assaulting of towns, where, if the ground be but firm whereon the batteries are erected, there is no further enquiry whom it belongs to, so it affords but a fit rise for the present purpose. Lact.

CONTRÔVERSY. n. f. [controversia, Lat.]

1. Dispute; debate; agitation of contrary opinions: a dispute is commonly oral, and a controversy in writing.

How cometh it to pass that we are so rent with mutual contentions, and that the church is so much troubled? If men had been willing to learn, all these controversies might have died the very day they were first brought forth. Hooker.

Without controversy great is the mystery of godliness. 1 Timothy.

Wild controversy then, which long had slept,
Into the press from ruin'd cloisters leapt. Denk.
This left no room for controversy about the title, nor for encroachment on the right of others. Lact.

2. A suit in law.

If there be a controversy between men, and they come unto judgment, that the judges may judge them, then they shall justify the righteous and condemn the wicked. Deuteronomy.

3. A quarrel.

The Lord hath a controversy with the nations. Jeremiah.

4. Opposition; enmity. This is an unusual sense.

The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lully sinews; throwing it aside,
And stemming it with hearts of controversy. Shak.

TO CONTROVERT. v. a. [controverto, Lat.] To debate; to ventilate in opposite books; to dispute any thing in writing.

If any person shall think fit to controvert them, he may do it very safely for me. Chayne.

Hooker seems to use the word controverse, if it be not an erratum.

Persuasion ought to be fully settled in men's hearts, that, in litigations and controverted causes of such quality, the will of God is to have them to do whatsoever the sentence of judicial and final decision shall determine. Hooker.

CONTRÔVERTIBLE. adj. [from controvert.]

Disputable; that may be the cause of controversy.

Discouraging of matters dubious, and many controvertible truths, we cannot without arrogancy intreat a credulity, or implore any farther assent than the probability of our reasons and verity of our experiments. Brown's Vulg. Err.

CONTRÔVERTIST. n. f. [from controvert.]

Disputant; a man versed or engaged in literary wars or disputations.

Who can think himself so considerable as not to dread this mighty man of demonstration, this prince of controvertists, this great lord and possessor of first principles? Tillotson.

CONTUMACIOUS. adj. [contumax, Lat.]

Obstinate; perverse; stubborn; inflexible.

He is in law said to be a contumacious person, who, on his appearance afterwards, departs the court without leave. Ayliffe's Parergon.

These certificates do only, in the generality, mention the party's contumacies and disobedience. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CONTUMELIOUS. adj. [contumeliosus, Lat.]

1. Reproachful; rude; sarcastick; contemptuous.

With scoffs and scorns, and contumelious taunts,
In open market-place produc'd they me
To be a publick spectacle. Shakspeare.

In all the quarrels and tumults at Rome, though the people frequently proceeded to rude contumelious language, yet no blood was ever drawn in any popular commotions, till the time of the Gracchi. Swift.

2. Inclined to utter reproach or practise insults; brutal; rude.

There is yet another sort of contumelious persons, who indeed are not chargeable with that circumstance of ill employing their wit; for they use none of it. Government of the Tongue.

Giving our holy virgins to the flame

Of contumelious, headily, madbrain'd war. Shaksp.

3. Productive of reproach; shameful; ignominious.

As it is in the highest degree injurious to them, so it is contumelious to him. Decay of Piety.

CONTUMELIOUSLY. adv. [from contumeliosus.] Reproachfully; contemptuously; rudely.

The people are not wont to take so great offence, when they are excluded from honours and offices, as when their persons are contumeliously trodden upon. Hosker.

Fie, lords! that you, being supreme magistrates,

Thus contumeliously should break the peace. Shak.

CONTUMELIOUSNESS. n. f. [from contumeliosus.] Rudeness; reproach.CONTUMELY. n. f. [from contumelia, Lat.] Rudeness; contemptuousness; bitterness of language; reproach.

If the helm of chief government be in the hands of a few of the wealthiest, then laws, providing for continuance thereof, must make the punishment of contumely and wrong, offset unto any of the common sort, sharp and grievous, that so the evil may be prevented. Hosker.

Th' oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely,

The pang of despis'd love, the law's delay.

Shakspere's Hamlet.

It was undervalued and depreed with some bitterness and contumely. Clarendon.

Why should any man be troubled at the contumelies of those, whose judgment deserves not to be valued? Tiltsfon.

Eternal contumely attend that guilty title, which claims exemption from thought, and arrogates to its wearers the prerogative of brutes. Addison.

TO CONTUSE. v. a. [from contusus, Latin.]

1. To beat together; to bruise.

Of their roots, barks, and feeds, contused together, and mingled with other earth, and well watered with warm water, there came forth herbs much like the other. Bacon.

2. To bruise the flesh without a breach of the continuity.

The ligature contuses the lips in cutting them, so that they require to be digested before they can unite. Wilksan.

CONTUSION. n. f. [from contusio.]

1. The act of beating or bruising.

2. The state of being beaten or bruised.

Take a piece of glass, and reduce it to powder, it acquiring by contusion a multitude of minute surfaces, from a diaphanous, degenerates into a white body. Boyle on Colours.

3. A bruise; a compression of the fibres, distinguished from a wound.

That winter lion, who in rage forgets

Aged contusions, and all bruise of time. Shaksp.

The bones, in sharp colds, wax brittle; and all contusions, in hard weather, are more hard to cure. Bacon.
